Dec. 1 Prices Set as Guide In Voluntary Line-Holding

Warning of Rollback To Fair Levels Given In Announcement By Administrator

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

The Government last night announced its "fair standards" for voluntary price action, asking in effect that every seller hold his prices at their December 1 levels.

Along with the announcement, made by Price Administrator Michael V. DiSalle, was a veiled warning that any seller who charged more than those prices without justification could expect mandatory rollbacks "at the earliest feasible time."

DiSalle asked Nation-wide compliance with the new "Pricing Standards," in order to "avoid the necessity for further mandatory controls."

Nevertheless, it is taken for granted that a mandatory, general price freeze is inevitable as soon as the necessary administrative staff is organized. For that reason, the standards proclaimed yesterday assume added significance, for they are expected to be very close to what will be converted into mandatory price ceiling criteria when the time comes.

They provide:

1. Manufacturers and producers may not raise prices if their net profits before taxes are more than those averaged during the period 1946-49; except,

2. If an individual article or service is selling at a loss, its price may be increased (a) by the amount necessary to make its sale profitable, or (b) by the amount of the increase since June 24, 1950, of the cost of direct wages and materials going into it, whichever is lower.

3. Wholesalers and retailers may not increase prices if their net profits before taxes exceed their average profits during 1946-49.

4. Dealers may not increase prices on the basis of increases in replacement costs or market costs, but only on the basis of inventory costs already paid.

In line with the last provision, the Price Administrator said that sellers must base their determination of price increases only on actual experience, not on a forecast of future conditions or estimated future costs.

DiSalle included in his statement a forecast that some prices, presumably those of some raw materials, may be rolled back even below the December 1 date.

"Prices of certain basic materials which were increased during the period between June 24, 1950 and December 1, 1950, will be subject to reduction . . . where that is necessary to make possible maintenance of December 1 price levels at later stages of manufacture," he said.

In an accompanying statement, DiSalle emphasized that he was not trying to limit profits to any company except insofar as added profits came under higher prices.

"There is no intention on the part of the Agency (ESA) to control profits which accrue through increased volume or economies in operation," he said.

"The Agency does feel, however, that in such a national emergency as presently confronts the country it is reasonable to ask all sellers to cooperate in the stabilization program to the extent that they do not increase prices in order to enable them to make greater

37 on AF Plane Missing Over West Pacific

TOKYO, Dec. 19 (U.P.).—A United States Air Force transport with 37 persons aboard has been missing for more than 18 hours over the western Pacific, Air Force headquarters here announced today.

The four-engined plane was last reported near the northern tip of the Philippine Islands in thickening weather. It is believed to have crashed in the sea or the north Philippine mountains.

Twenty planes searched for wreckage or traces of survivors, but bad weather hampered the effort. Thirty-five Navy and Air Force planes will take off at dawn Wednesday to continue the hunt.

The big C-54 Skymaster was carrying 30 passengers and a crew of seven from Okinawa Island to Clark Air Force Base, 40 miles north of the Philippines capital at Manila. It was due at 7:49 a. m. (6:49 p. m. Monday, EST.)

Police Force Lacks Men for 5-Day Week

Increasing Manpower Pinch May Stall Plan An Indefinite Time

By Alfred E. Lewis
Post Reporter

The police department does not have enough men to go on a five-day work week on New Year's Day, as planned. The force total is now 2072. This is 216 short of its 2288 goal.

With the local manpower pinch increasing, police officials doubt that they will have enough strength to make the shift from a six-day week by March or April, if at all.

As an alternative, it was learned on Capitol Hill, police officials are considering maintaining the six-day week, paying for the extra day at straight-time rates. This plan would require legislative authorization.

Police officials already have talked informally with Capitol Hill friends about the idea.

First reactions on the part of House District Committee members have been favorable, but there is no thought of action on the plan at this session.

Legislation to permit the payment of extra salary for the sixth working day in a week would go through the subcommittee headed by Representative James G. Davis (D., Ga.).

Details of the needed bill are expected to be worked up by District officials. Indications are it would be quickly cleared by the House District Committee.

The law authorizing the police force to go on a five-day week permitted the hiring of 300 additional rookies. Since the President signed the measure on August 15, the police department succeeded in signing up 195 rookies for training. This group will be ready for patrol duty by January 1.

However, turnover including the departure of 55 policemen on military leave, retirements and other separations left the department 216 policemen short of its new 2288 goal, as of yesterday.

Maj. Robert J. Barrett, superintendent of police, stated that he was reluctant to go on the shorter work week at this time because of his fear that the District will not be protected adequately with the present force working a shorter week.

A five-day week was authorized also for the White House and Park police. The two Federal units have been unable to make a permanent shift to the shorter week, partly because of the additional number needed to guard the President since the assassination attempt.

Communism . . . Would Be Served

Truman Vigorously Rejects Demand for Acheson Ouster

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

President Truman yesterday vigorously rejected Republican demands that he oust Secretary of State Dean Acheson and said removing Acheson would benefit communism, not the United States.

In a statement he read at his first news conference since declaring a state of national emergency, Mr. Truman said flatly: "I refuse to dismiss Acheson."

At the same time, the President challenged "those groups attacking our foreign policy and Mr. Acheson" to come forward with better policies if they have them. He declared "they owe it to their country" and added:

Time for "Hard Facts"

"This is a time for hard facts and close thinking. It is not a time for vague charges and pious generalities."

Secretary Acheson has been under attack for some time by Republicans in Congress who not only have questioned his policies but have charged him with harboring Communists in the State Department. Mr. Truman has repeatedly reiterated his faith in Acheson, who is now in Brussels attending a conference of Foreign Ministers and Defense Ministers of the Atlantic Pact nations.

On the question of Acheson's handling of foreign policy, Mr. Truman said his policy had been that of the United States since 1939 and had not changed since he was President, under four Secretaries of State. There has been no quarreling with that policy, he declared. The question was one of personalities, he said, and added that personalities in the 1950 political campaign were vicious but there were no issues.

Reds Would "Shoot" Acheson

As for Acheson's toleration of communism in the State Department, the President said:

"If communism were to prevail in the world—and it shall not prevail—Dean Acheson would be one of the first, if not the first, to be shot by the enemies of liberty and Christianity."

No Government official, he said, "has been more alive to communism's threat to freedom or more forceful in resisting it." He said Acheson had "helped shape and carry out our policy of resistance to communist imperialism" from the Truman plan of four years ago "to the recent moment when he advised me to resist the Communist invasion of South Korea."

"It was beyond me," the President said, to understand how "our position in the world would be im-

Red Reaction To Pact News Awaited Here

Russia Has Warned She Will Not Permit Arming of Germany

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

Official and diplomatic Washington wondered yesterday how Russia would react to the momentous decisions taken by the North Atlantic Treaty nations in Brussels.

For the Russians have warned the West at least twice in recent weeks that they would not put up with the rearmament of western Germany.

In spite of these warnings, the 12 western allies not only agreed to form a combined army of between 55 and 60 divisions under Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower; they also agreed to put German units into the new army if possible, and to start consultations on the subject with the German Federal Republic at Bonn.

It was taken for granted that Moscow would launch a furious propaganda drive against the Brussels decisions. But the West is used to propaganda; what worried a good many western diplomats here was whether the Russians would go beyond a war of nerves, and how, and when.

Already, according to the Western governments, the Russians have an army of at least 50,000 Germans in eastern Germany, with tanks and artillery and other weapons.

Last May 22 the United States, Britain and France formally and sternly protested to Moscow against the formation of this force, and they branded it a violation of wartime and postwar agreements to keep Germany disarmed.

No answer to this protest came for months. In September the western foreign ministers, meeting in New York, approved the creation of a mobile police of 30,-

Pact Leaders Vote Army Led By Eisenhower

Atlantic Council Also To Set Up Centralized Production Authority

BRUSSELS, Dec. 19 (AP).—The Atlantic Pact nations today unanimously approved creation of an international army to keep peace in Europe by strength, and made Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower the commander.

The 12 foreign ministers agreed on a plan to integrate West German troops in the force of one million men which they expect to have ready by the end of 1953 to defend a line from the Arctic to the Mediterranean.

They also decided to set up an international defense production board to gear the munitions industries of the 12 nations into a coordinated machine to turn out guns, tanks, planes and ships.

[Informed sources in Washington said this board would have an American of the highest caliber as its international director with an international staff.

[Among those mentioned for the post, which would be second only to Eisenhower's in importance, were Gen. Lucius D. Clay, former American commander in Germany; Gen. Brehon Somervell, former commander of the Army Service Forces, and Ferdinand Eberstadt, former vice chairman of the War Production Board.

[Secretary of Defense Marshall yesterday announced the appointment of William L. Batt as the American member of the new international board. Batt, an-

Interest High in 5 Counties

So. Maryland Tobacco Farmers Vote Today on Market Quotas

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Southern Maryland is holding an election today that has created as much interest in many parts of the five counties as the general election last November.

The vote is on the question of marketing quotas on Maryland tobacco, to start with the 1951 crop that will be marketed in the spring of 1952.

If marketing quotas are adopted, the acreage to be planted to tobacco next year will be cut from 49,000 to 48,000. Each grower is supposed to have his acreage reduced in the same proportion, with a small reserve left over for a so-called "new farm" quota. No grower will be allowed to sell tobacco except that grown on this acreage.

Opponents and proponents have been busy electioneering, with daily and nightly meetings in each county.

Last night those who oppose the measure were predicting it would be overwhelmingly defeated. Those favoring it predicted that there was a chance for it, but admitted it was slim.

Polls will open today at 8 a. m. and will close at 7 p. m. Also, many ballots are being cast by mail by persons eligible to vote who are forced to be absent from Southern Maryland today.

Chief objection to the proposition stems from growers who complain that the proposed cut in acreage planted in tobacco next year has been unevenly distributed. Survey groups visited each tobacco farm last summer and accumulated statistics on each farm's tobacco history, from which the allotments under the proposed quota law, were adopted.

Air Guard For District Called Up

Almost 1000 Men Affected by Action; To Train at Andrews And Defend Capital

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

The District of Columbia Air National Guard yesterday was called to active duty for aerial defense of the Nation's Capital and other vital installations in this area.

All but one small unit will report for full-time duty February 1 at Andrews Air Force Base, Md., present home base of the local Guardsmen. It is expected that they will remain at Andrews to form part of America's growing air defense network.

The local airmen form part of a Nation-wide call of five Air National Guard groups and supporting units alerted for duty on February 1, announced yesterday by Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, USAF chief of staff.

Since the Korean fighting started, the Air Force has grown from 48 to 61 groups. Five Air National Guard groups were called up earlier and switched from air defense to tactical support missions. Four Air Reserve tactical groups also were activated and four provisional close support groups created for Far East duty.

The five additional Air Guard groups getting orders yesterday will bring the Air Force to 66 groups—two short of the 68 groups aimed for by next summer. Vandenberg's announcement did not mention either the designation of the units or the bases to which assigned, for security reasons.

Brig. Gen. William H. Abendroth, District Guard commander, announced the local call-up under voluntary censorship procedure, which permits local but not national release of such information.

The District Guard units alerted yesterday form part of the 113th Fighter Wing, commanded by Col. Laidler B. Mackall, 4434 Garfield st. nw., 34-year-old Washington lawyer. Only D. C. Air Guard not called up is the 113th Aircraft Control Squadron, a small unit which is not part of the 113th Wing.

Units ordered into Federal service were 113th Fighter Wing headquarters, 113th Fighter Group, commanded by Lieut. Col. Melvin C. Garlow, Coventry rd., Alexandria senior pilot of Capital Airlines; 113th Maintenance and Supply Group, commanded by Lieut. Col. John F. Graham, 201 Danbury rd., Bethesda, a Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. engineer; 113th Air Base Group, commanded by Lieut. Col. William H. Beard, 2814 Connecticut ave.; 121st Weather Station, commanded by Capt. Donald E. Martin, 2902 S. Abingdon st., Arlington, a Weather Bureau employe; and 121st Fighter Squadron, commanded by Lieut. Col. Willard W. Millikan, 3346 Martha Custis dr., Alexandria.

Millikan's squadron is equipped with Republic F-84 jet fighters. Exact strength of the unit is withheld but normally a fighter squadron has 25 planes. Other units of the Guard have some piston-engined transports and utility planes. Over-all strength of the

Eisenhower Naming Gruenther European Army Chief of Staff

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 19 (U.P.).—Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, named today as supreme commander of western Europe's armed forces, said he hoped to preserve the peace "but I know it will be a long, hard task."

The general, en route to Denver for a Christmas vacation, said he would name Lieut. Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther as his chief of staff and that he would go to Europe the first of the year.

Gruenther, Army Department deputy for plans and operations, is in Brussels attending the North Atlantic conference. Eisenhower described him as "one of the most brilliant men in the service."

Eisenhower said location of his European headquarters is undecided "but it won't be in a large city."

In New York Columbia University granted Eisenhower an "indefinite leave of absence," but made it clear it expects him to return to his post as president as soon as the international situation permits.

Eisenhower said he did not see why Russia should view his appointment as an aggressive move. He stressed that the Allied command arrangements were made solely for the purpose of preserving peace.

"There is no belligerent attitude behind them," he said.

Eisenhower, supreme commander of Allied Forces in World War II, said his new post as supreme commander of the unified North Atlantic armed forces would be "far different."

"This present job is a symbol of the common understanding between Western nations," he said. "Only in unity can we be certain of preserving the ideals and principles with which we want to live.

"Our strength will depend upon the degree to which we find a union of understanding as much as our military strength. The first steps will be to make effective the political agreements already reached on troops—then will come the assembling of troops into an integrated force.

"I am hopeful of preserving peace, but I know it will be a long, hard task."

Eisenhower said he planned to go to Europe for a 10-day inspection trip about January 1. He said he would then return to Washington for about 10 days of planning conferences before going to Europe to stay.

Asked by photographers to smile for a picture, he replied, "There's not much to smile about these days."

He said the sooner he can return to his work as president of Columbia University "the more pleasing it will be."

Beachhead Holds Firm

Reds Attack Below Parallel, Within 45 Miles of Capital

TOKYO (Wednesday), Dec. 20 (AP).—North Korean Reds, now believed to have 150,000 regrouped forces in action, were reported today to have clashed with South Koreans along a 30-mile front only 45 miles from Seoul.

A United States Eighth Army briefing officer acknowledged that the North Koreans had made some "limited advances" by weaving along the thirty-eighth parallel.

The flareup of fighting on the long dormant west sector occurred near Chunchon. It is 10 miles south of the thirty-eighth parallel and 45 miles northeast of Seoul, the South Korean capital. Chunchon and Seaul are linked by highway and rail line.

Beachhead Lines Hold

In northeast Korea, United States Tenth Corps forces clung to the last Allied toehold around the port of Hungnam. Last night star shells of a powerful United Nations fleet off Hungnam illuminated the small Allied beachhead against night forays by Chinese and North Korean Reds.

There was no elaboration on the size and intensity of the action around Chunchon in western Korea. But it was the first time a fighting front of as much as 30 miles had been mentioned since the Eighth Army pulled back south of the thirty-eighth parallel before the pressure of Chinese Communist hordes.

Yesterday General MacArthur's headquarters said an estimated 150,000 North Korean troops were back in action in Korea after regrouping. Headquarters said another 50,000 North Koreans were available in staging areas of Manchuria, where they are safe from being bombed by United Nation planes.

New Attacks Repulsed

The South Korean government has published plans for civilian evacuation, if military operations warrant, from areas in South Korea, including Seoul.

Seoul was overrun by North Korean forces in June, the first month of the Korean war. United Nation forces liberated it shortly

Wu Sees 'Plot' In U.N. Efforts On Cease-Fire

LAKE SUCCESS, Dec. 19 (AP).—Communist China's Wu Hsiu-chuan blasted United Nations' cease-fire efforts as "trickery and a plot" in a farewell statement before leaving for home. But he wished the American people a "Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year" with a rare smile.

"We believe that only by striving for the cessation of the war may we obtain a real cease-fire," Wu said at Idlewild Airport.

The Chinese Communists are insisting on their own terms to end the fighting, but the U. N. has rejected their demands and has set up a three-man committee to try to work out a cease-fire agreement. Little hope is held that this committee will be successful.

"Any device which reverses this process (the Chinese plan) is nothing but a trickery and a plot," Wu continued. "Although our peace proposal to stop the war was rejected by the Anglo-American ruling circles without due consideration, we are not in despair. We shall continue to strive for peace."

General Wu was smiling as he arrived at the airport with his entourage and 2500 pounds of baggage—American radios, books, electrical appliances and the like. He paid $1621.39 for excess baggage, handing airport officials two $1000 bills for the amount.

Sir Benegal N. Rau, Indian member of the cease-fire committee, talked with Wu this morning and then met the other members for nearly an hour. A United Nations spokesman said no answer had been received and the committee is considering what further steps can be taken.

Envoy Visits Truman

Kirk Last Met Stalin in 1949; Secret Police Trail U. S. Aide

By the United Press

Adm. Alan G. Kirk, American Ambassador to Russia, said yesterday he had not been able to talk with Premier Stalin in the past 17 months and was under constant surveillance in Moscow by secret police.

Kirk

He described difficulties facing "capitalistic" foreign envoys in the Red capital after conferring with President Truman following his return here for consultation with high United States officials.

Because of the tense international situation, Kirk said he did "not believe it advisable" to make public details of his report.

It was his first homecoming since he took over the key post in June, 1949. He will return to Moscow next month after another talk with Mr. Truman.

The ambassador said he and his staff had almost no contact with the Russian people for many reasons. First, he said, he is always accompanied by at least four MVD operatives who shadow him wherever he goes outside the embassy. This discourages the natives from talking freely.

No Russian citizens are allowed to enter the embassy grounds, he added, and no foreigner in Moscow is permitted to travel more than 50 kilometers from the city without special permission.

Kirk said the only time he ever talked with Stalin was in August, 1949, shortly after he took over the diplomatic post. At that time, he said, the Russian premier was "strong, active and fully alert mentally."

Permanent Relocation Plans Now Under Study

Employes Shifted May Equal Total Sent From D. C. During Last War

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

At least 35,000 Government workers will be moved permanently from the Washington area if the White House follows present recommendations of Governmnet space experts.

Less than a week ago Jess Larson, General Services Administrator, and other officials testified before Congress that they were considering moving out 8000 to 10,000 Government employes.

Last night an Administration source told a reporter: "The 8000 or 10,000 personnel figure now looks very, very conservative. The recommendations to be made to the White House for permanent decentralization may well involve as many people as 35,000—and could go even higher."

One large factor in the recent upward personnel estimates, the official explained, is a feeling at the Defense Department that many of its functions presently performed here, could perfectly well be handled elsewhere.

Basic purpose of decentralization is to help meet the critical space shortage here which is even more acute today than at the beginning of World War II, officials said.

"In any event, there will be no before-Christmas announcements pin-pointing which agencies will leave town," the source said. He recalled that a similar announcement, similarly timed, dampened spirits in many households in December, 1941.

The agencies would be relocated under the so-called "decentralization program," now being whipped into final shape by a Budget Bureau task force, headed by Lee Martin. Until last spring Martin was assistant budget director in charge of estimates.

Unusually detailed and confidential preparatory work now is going into the moving proposal because Administration officials have publicly announced that agency moves to distant cities will be permanent this time.

Twelve different Federal agencies, manned by about 35,000 workers, were moved from Washington early in World War II but almost every one returned.

Under present plans, Budget Bureau recommendations on moving will be sent to President Truman—but not before the middle of January and probably later.

The White House will make the final decision.

It was action initiated by President Truman which brought the World War II-dispersed agencies back to the area.

Unless the threat of enemy attack here becomes much greater the actual signal to move some Federal agencies will await congressional authority. In event of emergency, the President could order decentralization by executive order.

The Administration has asked for the permanent-move authority in the pending bill to disperse key Government agencies to the rim of Washington. This legislation is probably dead for this session, but early action will be sought in January.

The two programs are separate, though obviously related.

U. S. Leases Space In Cafritz Building

The Federal Government has contracted to lease 65,000 square feet in the new Cafritz office building at 1625 I st. nw., it was learned last night.

The Federally-allotted space, representing about one-third of the building's total area, may be occupied by the Housing and Home Finance Agency, a General Service Administration spokesman said. It will be ready for occupancy in January.

Another Anna Found by FBI At Reed Club

By The Associated Press

The Senate Armed Services Committee said yesterday the FBI had located a woman whose maiden name was Anna Rosenberg and that she had admitted being associated with a Communist club in New York City in the early 1930s.

The disclosure was made in a report filed by the committee with the Senate urging confirmation of Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg as Assistant Secretary of Defense.

The report made it clear Mrs. Rosenberg and the other former Anna Rosenberg were two different persons.

Of the latter, the committee reported:

"This woman whose maiden name was Anna Rosenberg, admits to the FBI agents that she was associated with the John Reed Club in New York from shortly after its founding until 1934, when she moved to California, and that she knew of no other Anna Rosenberg who was associated with the John Reed Club."

Representative Rankin (D., Miss.) meanwhile continued his criticism of her appointment to Federal office.

In a House speech, Rankin said he was "probably more responsible for Mr. Acheson being made Secretary of State than any other man alive."

Hiss Seen in Post

He said it was his amendment to the rules of the House which created the House Un-American Activities Committee that exposed the "treason" of Alger Hiss.

"If it had not been for that," Rankin said, "Hiss probably would be Secretary of State now and Acheson would be his assistant." He added:

"But to show you how the line is being followed, Anna Rosenberg, a little Yiddish woman from Austria-Hungary, will now become Assistant Secretary of National Defense, if confirmed by the Senate, and will have more power over the lives of the American people than was ever exercised by any American President—while General Marshall wonders where he was the night before.

Suit Is Filed By Robeson On Passport

The left-wing singer and admirer of Russia charged that Acheson was violating his constitutional right to freedom of assembly and speech, in revoking his passport last summer. Robeson said he needed the passport for a European concert tour.

In the District Court suit, Robeson asked that his pasport be declared valid, and that Acheson be forced to withdraw any orders that may have been given Government agencies to prevent Robeson from leaving the country.

Robeson decribed himself in the suit as a "loyal native-born American citizen who by reason of ability and achievement has deservedly won himself respect and recognition throughout the world, not only as one of the great living Americans, but also as one of the world's leading personalities."

Chennault Urges Chiang's Troops For Asia Fighting

By the United Press

Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault, of "Flying Tiger" fame, said yesterday the United States should use Nationalist Chinese forces to fight communism in Asia.

Chennault, a long-time friend of Nationalist Leader Chiang Kai-shek, gave his views to a closed session of the Senate Armed Services Committee. He was called at the request of Senators William F. Knowland (R., Calif.), Styles Bridges (R., N. H.) and other Republicans.

Acting Chairman Richard B. Russell (D., Ga.) had "no comment" on Chennault's testimony.

The former head of the "Flying Tigers," whose planes fought the Japanese before the United States entered World War II, told newsmen afterward the Chinese Communists are not afraid of American or United Nations forces, but are "deathly afraid of a Nationalist invasion of the mainland.

By building up the strength of "anti-Communist Asiatics," he said, this coountry could relieve the pressure on U. N. forces in Korea.

McCarthy Claims Evidence Karr Worked for 'Worker'

By the United Press

Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.) claimed documentary support yesterday for his Communist charges against David Karr, New York advertising executive and former reporter for radio commentator and columnist Drew Pearson.

Karr meanwhile, offered to pay $10,000 to the Red Cross or any other charity if McCarthy can prove his previous charge that Karr once worked on the staff of the Communist Daily Worker.

McCarthy placed in the Senate record a photostatic copy of an alleged report, dated June 25, 1943, on stationery of the Civil Service Commission. The signature was scratched out and the document was market "secret."

It recommended that Karr be refused a Government job, and said that FBI records indicated that his "activities, affiliations and associations . . . are communistic."

McCarthy charged in a Senate speech last Friday that Karr "is a most active member of the party and carries instructions and orders to Pearson." He said Pearson has displayed a "willingness to follow the orders" and has therefore served as a "voice of international communism."

Pearson replied that the charges are absurd, that his own record of fighting Communism speaks for itself, and that if Karr is pro-Communist, "the Washington Monument is a hole in the ground."

Pearson said he had received a letter from the Marine Corps Fathers Association denouncing McCarthy's "venomous personal attacks on loyal Americans." The letter said the Senator's tactics "must bring joy to Stalin and his American satellites." McCarthy is a former Marine.

After McCarthy renewed his attack yesterday, Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D., N. Mex.) told the Senate that he served on a House committee which thoroughly investigated Karr in 1943 and cleared him.

Anderson then read into the record a letter from Karr saying:

"I will pay $10,000 to the American Red Cross or any other charity (McCarthy) designates if he can prove that I was on the staff of the Daily Worker for two minutes, let alone two years."

McCarthy interrupted Anderson to ask if it would be adequate proof for New York Journal-American reporter Howard Rushmore to testify that he once employed Karr on the Daily Worker. Rushmore, now an anti-Communist writer, once was a movie critic for the Worker.

McCarthy did not follow up his suggestion that Rushmore would back up his story, and Anderson did not go beyond the offer in Karr's letter.

Among the assertions in McCarthy's photostatic document was the statement that Karr "was a member of the Communist Party" while employed by the Daily Worker in 1937-39.

The same document said Karr formed "close association" with the Communist Party while employed as a Fuller Brush salesman around New York in 1938.

The apparent conflict in dates and employments was not explained.

In his Senate speech, McCarthy also repeated earlier criticism of the Adam Hat Co., for sponsoring Pearson's radio broadcasts.

"The truth is," McCarthy told the Senate, "that Drew Pearson—under the direction of David Karr or the Communist Party, would not be pouring his poison into millions of American homes every Sunday if the Adam Hat Co. did not hire him and pay him to do it."

Objections to Rush Bills Slow Congress

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Senate GOP objections to quick passage of emergency war powers and other "rush" measures yesterday slowed down a congressional drive to clear legislative dockets before Christmas.

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) flashed the GOP red light as Senate Administration leaders urged immediate approval of the war powers bill, empowering the President to reorganize Government agencies and revise existing contracts.

Taft complained the reorganizing authority was far too broad and asked that it go over to the Eighty-second Congress, convening January 3. (Democrats will have only a two-vote Senate margin in the new Congress.)

"It seems to me this Congress is through," Taft told the Senate. "We are trying to rush through a great deal of emergency legislation . . . It seems to me that this Congress, a lame duck Congress, ought to finish what we set out to do (namely pass only defense appropriations and an excess profits tax bill before adjournment).

Despite Taft's protests, the Senate Democratic Policy Committee definitely slated action this session on war powers legislation, the Administration's civil defense program and a big military public works measure, in addition to the already scheduled tax and money bills.

War Powers Bill Reported

Across the Capitol, the House Judiciary Committee favorably reported the war powers bill without major change and House leaders said they hope to pass it today. Also slated for House approval today were the civil defense and public works bills.

Although the war powers late starter may lose its reorganization features in the Senate, Democratic leaders on both sides of the Capitol predicted the much maligned "lame duck" session will chalk up a record by passing all it set out to and more.

They conceded privately, however, that there is virtually no chance of a pre-Christmas getaway, however. Tentatively, both Houses plan to recess Friday night until the Tuesday after Christmas and complete the emergency program before New Year's.

Yesterday's move in the Senate for war powers revision contrasted sharply with the action in the House. Chairman Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.) told newsmen not a vote was cast in his House Judiciary Committee against restoring war powers to reshuffle agencies and to change existing and future Government contracts.

Objections to Authority

Senate objections were aimed chiefly at proposed unceilinged authority for the President to reorganize the Government. Senate Expenditures Chairman John L. McClellan (D., Ark.) called a committee meeting on the bill today. He hinted the committee may quickly report out the contract authority asked, but suggested revision or omission of the merger power.

McClellan introduced two amendments to the Administration bill, sponsored by Senate Democratic Leader Scott W. Lucas (Ill.). These would bar creation of a new Department of Welfare and exempt the Army's Corps of Engineers from reshuffling.

At the same time, McClellan introduced a bill providing for the contract authority. He said his committee will weigh all of the proposals.

During the Senate debate, Taft complained that the President already has power to submit reorganization plans which automatically become law unless rejected by either House.

"If it is desired to create a particular department in a hurry let us have the plan submitted and let us do it," Taft said. "But we ought not to embark on some new project which is fundamentally different. The new Congress meets in two weeks."

Lucas Stresses Contracts

Lucas indicated he had no objection to some revision of the reorganization authority but termed quick enactment of authority to reopen contracts "absolutely vital and essential."

Senattor H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.) said he had received complaints that some companies were going broke on Government contracts because of sharp rises in the price of raw materials. Lucas said the bill would cover that type of situation.

Heading down the last lap on "must" bills, the Senate meanwhile arranged to call up today the $3,200,000,000 Senate version of the House-passed excess profits tax bill. The Senate Appropriations Committee has completed hearings on the 18 billion dollar defense money bill and may report it today. The money bill will follow the tax bill before the Senate.

During Conflict

Bill Outlaws Trade With U. S. Enemies

Senator Herbert R. O'Conor (D., Md.), introduced legislation yesterday to outlaw trading with nations "in armed conflict" with the United States, regardless of whether war has been declared.

It also would apply to any country "allied" with a nation in armed conflict with this Nation. This presumably would apply to Russia since it has a military pact with Communist China whose forces are fighting in Korea.

O'Conor said in a statement that existing laws forbidding "trading with an enemy" have not "kept up with the realities and the modern concept of undeclared warfare."

"As presently drawn, these laws rely upon the formal declaration of war or the declaration of a national emergency before it becomes a crime to trade with this country's enemies," O'Conor said.

"Thus, it was possible for citizens of the United States, despite the hostilities which have raged in Korea since last June, to evade our export control laws by exporting from this country, or by acquiring strategic materials in foreign countries and shipping them directly to Red China."

Hoover Talk Tonight To Be on Foreign Policy

NEW YORK, Dec. 19 (AP).—Former President Herbert Hoover will deliver a major address on United States foreign policy Wednesday night.

The address, entitled "Our National Policies in This Crisis," will be carried over the network of the Mutual Broadcasting Co. from 8 to 8:30 p.m. (E. S. T.).

Last week, Hoover's office said he had received more than 1000 letters asking his views on the current international situation.

Whisky Aids Rescue Of Horse Stuck in Ice

PENCOED, Wales, Dec. 19 (U.P.).—A 63-year old widow poured a bottle of 12-year-old Scotch whisky down the throat of a nearly frozen horse stuck in an ice-covered stream and saved its life.

The owners had decided to shoot the horse when Mrs. Amelia Griffiths arrived with her bottle. After one gulp the horse began kicking. Halfway through the fifth the horse freed two legs, and with the last swig shook himself and walked out.

Bill to Aid Tito Passes Senate, Goes to Truman

The Senate completed congressional action yesterday on a bill providing 38 million dollars for famine-stricken Yugoslavia to help strengthen Marshal Tito's anti-Moscow government against possible Russian attack.

By voice vote, the Senate accepted and sent to President Truman for signature a Senate-House conference committee compromise which already had been approved by the House.

Mr. Truman had asked for rush action on the bill to aid Tito's Communist but anti-Russian government for fear internal troubles might undermine his regime and lay it open to Soviet aggression.

American officials also are mindful that Tito has 32 well-trained divisions that would be available in event the Russians strike in Southeast Europe. The Yugoslav army is bigger than all other Western European armies combined.

The compromise measure actually authorize transfer of 50 million dollars in already-appropriated Marshall Plan funds for use in Yugoslavia. The government already has spent 12 million dollars for supplies to Tito, including surplus food stocks held by the Agriculture Department.

Before the vote, Senator John L. McClellan (D., Ark.), denounced the bill as the "height of stupidity." He said it is "simply an attempt to coddle and appease another Communist dictator."

Dec. 1 Picked as Guide for Price Control Standards

profits than they were able to make before fighting began in Korea."

The ESA "served notice" in its announcement that all price action to be taken in the future "will make use of its base period ending not later than December 1, 1950, and that no seller will derive any advantage under the regulations from price increases after that date."

Presumably, this would mean that sellers who increase prices now, in the absence of increased costs making such action necessary to maintain a profit, can expect rollbacks.

Some Complaints Expected

As announced, the fair pricing standards can be expected to infuriate auto manufacturers and other industries who held prices since the Korean outbreak and have raised them, or prepared to raise them, only in the past two weeks.

If they abide by the standards, their prices are in effect frozen and their profits diminished, while most of those who jumped prices between June 24 and December 1 stand to retain the gains they made.

Yesterday, the General Motors Corp, whose recent price increases were rolled back by ESA to December 1, in its first mandatory action, made public a proposal to DiSalle to "unfreeze" the cars it has ordered blocked in dealers' hands.

Its suggestion was that it and its dealers resume deliveries—which GM stopped on Monday—at its new, higher prices, pending further ESA study. If ESA found the price increases unjustified, GM proposed, it would refund its dealers the excess charged, and they in turn would rebate the addition to their customers.

ESA has not yet published a formal reply to the proposal, but it is clear it will not accept it, and that the rollback to December 1 levels still stands.

Who Is Running Price Control

"Who is dictating the price control of our economy," an ESA spokesman said yesterday, "General motors or this agency?"

Meantime, ESA sent a complimentary telegram to the Ford Co., praising it for abiding by the ESA rollback order. Like GM, Ford had announced increases in its 1951 prices. Unlike GM, it rolled back the prices and continued to sell its cars at the old rates.

Earlier yesterday, President Truman strongly backed up the ESA in its auto price ceiling. Asked at his news conference what he thought of GM's action, Mr. Truman quickly replied that the law would be enforced.

The prices on cars will be just what the Stabilization Administrator says they should be, Mr. Truman declared. Asked if the Government could force GM to sell its cars at the ceiling price, Mr. Truman said that bridge would be crossed when it was reached.

In what looked to be the first steps of its second mandatory action, the ESA yesterday asked West Coast oil refiners voluntarily to rescind a recent 25 cents per barrel increase in the price of crude petroleum.

But, the ESA said, it has already received an oral refusal from the companies and accordingly has asked their representatives to a meeting here on Thursday. It is expected that they will be faced with the same mandatory action that greeted the auto manufacturers.

The ESA also asked 40 major refiners in the East and Middle West not to make any increases in their purchase price of crude oil or the selling price of the refined products they make.

The West Coast producers explained their refusal to rescind the price increases, the ESA announcement said, on grounds that their new military requirements are so large that they have had to ask high-cost producers to reopen wells not economic to operate.

In other control action yesterday, the National Production Authority ordered a 20 percent reduction in the civilian use of tin during February and March.

NPA officials served notice that they would soon issue orders designed to promote the use of substitute materials in containers. That appeared to presage action to have beer sold only in bottles and coffee and other dry products put up in paper, glass or fiber packages.

'Ham' Tells Mother Son Is in Hospital

Mrs. Marguerite L. Ray of 4007 25th st., ne., learned from a radio "ham" yesterday that her son, Marine Corpl. Richard Shannon Ray, 21, has been hospitalized after fighting in Korea. Mrs. Ray did not know whether her son has been wounded or injured.

The radio "ham," Conrad W. B. Barger of 7512 Foster st., District Heights, Md., relayed the message to her from another radio amateur operator in Santa Ana, Calif. The California operator receives messages from an Army radio station in Japan, Barger said.

Ray, a graduate of McKinley High School, enlisted in the Marines three years ago. He was assigned to the Fifth Regiment, First Marine Division.

In June of this year he was to be returned to the United States, having served two years overseas. He telephoned his mother from Pearl Harbor to tell her that his orders had been changed.

Rotarians to Hear Bishop

The Right Rev. Angus Dun, Episcopal Bishop of Washington, will deliver a Christmas message at a meeting of the Rotary Club and the Rotary Foundation at 12:15 p. m. today at the Mayflower Hotel.

Controls Provide Usual Margins, Retailer Says

Rowland Jones, jr., president of the American Retail Federation, last night said the voluntary pricing standards announced yesterday merely "call for the continuance of customary margins over the costs of goods."

"We believe," his statement continued," that the overwhelming majority of retailers have been operating and are continuing to operate with customary markups which cover their costs of business and such profits as they are able to realize under the pressure of competition."

He said that from June to October wholesale prices increased 7 percent while retail prices increased only 3½ percent, according to reports of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Truman Not to Dismiss Acheson

proved by the retirement of Dean Acheson." In fact, he said, Acheson's work at Brussels "has made it possible for me to designate General Eisenhower as supreme Allied commander in Europe."

Likes MacArthur's Position

In response to questions, Mr. Truman said the former Army Chief of Staff and wartime supreme commander in Europe would have exactly the same position in Europe that Gen. Douglas MacArthur has in Asia. He pointed out that MacArthur had been in command of all Allied forces in Asia before he was named to command United Nations troops in Korea.

Last night the President issued a statement explaining that Eisenhower would command all United States forces in Europe, Army, Navy and Air, in addition to his Allied command. The statement explained that he would exercise "operational" command only and that administration would be carried by the services themselves, as at present.

Asked if American forces would be part of Eisenhower's command, the President said yes, there would be additional American forces. He would not say how many or when they would be sent, except that it would be as soon as it was possible to get ready. That, he added, was the reason for the emergency he has just declared.

Neither would he say when Eisenhower would go to Europe or who would comprise his staff. The first, he explained, was a matter of security and the second was up to Eisenhower himself.

Denies Symington Rumor

Mr. Truman denied published reports that W. Stuart Symington, head of the National Security Resources Board, had been selected to succeed Gen. George C. Marshall as Defense Secretary. He said there was nothing to the story and that Symington and Marshall would continue to fill their present jobs and Robert A. Lovett would continue as Deputoy Secretary of Defense.

A reporter called attention to the opinion of some writers that a "wave of isolationism" was sweeping the country and asked if the President feared that condition. Mr. Truman said he thought there was no wave of isolationism outside the Chicago Tribune.

Asks Christmas Prayers

Another reporter, pursuing the same line, asked if it wasn't true that a great deal of White House mail was "anything but isolationist; it means fight." That is right, Mr. Truman said. He added feelingly that whenever the country was in trouble all the people were behind the Government and they were now. And he urged the correspondents not to let anyone fool them on that score.

The representative of the Religious News Service called attention to the recent exchange of letters between Mr. Truman and Representative F. Edward Hebert (D., La.) on the question of proclaiming a national day of prayer. He asked if the President had "closed the door on this suggestion or is it still under consideration."

Mr. Truman said the door had not been closed. He said he was preparing a Christmas proclamation which he thought would satisfy the reporter and religious leaders as well.

The White House later explained that Mr. Truman referred to his annual Christmas greetings to the Nation, which he expects to deliver from his home at Independence, Mo., when he lights the Christmas tree on the White House grounds.

He said he hoped to spend the Christmas weekend in Missouri and would leave Friday if he does go.

Marine Corps League Gives Truman Badge

By the United Press

The Marine Corps League, which was fighting mad at President Truman a few weeks ago, presented him with a gold membership badge yesterday.

The league's ire was aroused by a letter in which Mr. Truman referred to the Marines as the Navy's police force, and said the corps has a propaganda machine "almost equal to Stalin's."

Mr. Truman later apologized in person before the legaue's annual convention here. The badge was presented at the White House by League Commandant Maurice Fagan.

Military Leave Granted for Fire Captain McNeil

John J. Corson of Post Joins McKinsey Management Firm

John J. Corson has resigned as Assistant Business Manager of The Washington Post to join McKinsey & Company, national management consulting firm. He will maintain headquarters in Washington.

Corson

Corson joined The Post in 1945, as director of research. Subsequently he served as circulation director and since November, 1949, as assistant business manager. Prior to his association with The Post, he served in the Federal Government as director of the Bureau of Old Age and Survivors Insurance, director of the U. S. Employment Service, and Deputy Director General of UNRRA. In 1948 he served as national president of the American Society for Public Administration.

Corson has written numerous articles and three books on problems of business and governmental organization, social security, manpower, labor relations and various phases of personnel management.

In announcing that Corson joined the firm, Marvin Bower, managing partner of McKinsey & Company, said:

"The current mobilization period is creating and will undoubtedly continue to create serious management problems for both business concerns and Government agencies. We believe that Mr. Corson's rich experience in key positions in Government agencies and in the newspaper field equip him to make a significant contribution in assisting both business and Government agencies in the solution of problems or organization, manpower, social security and pension planning, labor relations and other aspects of personnel management."

Philip L. Graham, publisher of The Washington Post, in announcing Corson's resignation, commented:

"In two operating departments of the newspaper and later in its business management, John Corson made a significant contribution to the progress of The Washington Post. He has long been interested in the management consulting field, which he has decided to enter, and his qualifications there are unquestioned. We regret his departure from our organization, and are confident of the fine contribution he will make in his new association."

Officer Washed From Sub at Night Is Presumed Dead

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 19 (U.P.). The Navy said today there was "no hope" for an officer washed overboard from the submarine Sea Lion in a mysterious operation off Cape Henry last night, but that Navy helicopters had joined the search.

The missing officer was identified as Lt. (J.G.) Richard M. Ryder of Norfolk.

A fifth Naval District spokesman said the Sea Lion, a veteran of World War II undersea warfare, now is a transport submarine for "special missions." He said it was not "normal operations" for submarine crewmen to be on deck at night, especially in rough weather, but he had no further details.

Plasma Substitute Wins U. S. Approval

The National Resources Council has authorized armed services use of a blood plasma substitute, it was learned yesterday.

The substitute body fluid is dextran, a syrupy substance developed in Sweden some five years ago.

It is produced from milk, beet juice and molasses by the action of certain cellular organisms.

Its acceptance for clinical trial singles it out as the most promising of a number of blood plasma substitutes now under study for stockpiling in the event of atomic warfare.

On Limited Basis Only

The NRC approval, however, does not mean it will be used on any more than a limited basis, officials said. The present American supply of the plasma substitute is extremely limited. A Swedish firm in New York, it was explained, had only 800 bottles of the fluid when the armed forces were authorized to buy it for clinical use.

The NRC action followed a special symposium held here early last month under NRC sponsorship. At the conference, Dr. Gunnar Thorsen of Stockholm, reported successes with dextran's use in his country.

Last Friday, Dr. Thorsen, who pioneered animal experiments and human use of dextran, spoke here before a meeting of research workers at the Naval Medical Research Center, Bethesda, Md. Many of Sweden's larger hospitals, he said, use the syrup routinely instead of using blood plasma.

Cautions Against Mistakes

He cautioned American investigators against repeating mistakes made in Sweden during early use of the fluid. The chief error, he said, was the use of dextran in too crude a manufacturing form. The more refined product now marketed, he said, does not clot smaller bloodways, and is less likely to result in bad reactions than blood plasma itself.

Dr. Thorsen said he did not know how stable dextran is for stockpiling purposes, but pointed out he had kept bottles of it in hospital roof rafters, in near-zero temperatures and intense summer heat, without affecting its clinical value.

The Swedish blood specialist told the Navy doctors one dramatic incident in dextran's early use. A Swedish woodsman, he said, was found crushed through the hips under a fallen tree.

Presumably Dead

To all medical appearances, he was dead, except that when a needle was thrust into his heart its end wavered, showing there was still some heart action, Dr. Thorsen said. In the next 25 minutes, he said, the doctors "pressured" four quarts of dextran into his veins.

The accident victim revived sufficiently to give a clear account of what had happened, Dr. Thorsen said. Another hour later, however, the patient's blood pressure fell rapidly, and he died.

"I asked the pathologist what made this man die," said Dr. Thorsen.

"That is not the question," the pathologist answered. "The question is, what made him live."

In his Friday talk, Dr. Thorsen showed moving pictures of the bloodstream in the belly fat of a rat and how the circulation is affected with the introduction of fluids. The pictures clearly showed how crude dextran induces clumping and clotting of blood cells, and how the "sludging" could be removed by injection of the more refined product.

One of Two Substitutes

Dextran is one of two blood plasma substitutes under large-scale study in the United States. An earlier blood plasma substitute, periston, was used by the Germans on more than 500,000 troops in World War II, and is in widespread use in most German hospitals now.

Actually, blood specialists said, neither can correctly be designated as plasma or blood substitutes. Neither duplicates the chemistry of plasma, and both act only as "circulatory volume expanders," it was said.

One mystery of dextran is that no one knows what happens to it after its introduction into the bloodstream. Despite every care to measure it in recoveries from body tissue, less than half of the dextran given an experimental animal can ever be found again.

Saw Tosses Plank On 3-Year-Old, Causing His Death

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 19 (U.P.).—Kenneth Moore wanted a platform for the electric train he bought his 3-year-old son, Gary.

Moore decided that a power-saw which workers were using on a construction job near his home would be a big help in cutting the lumber. Moore and a neighbor took Gary with them to the construction job, cutting 8-foot strips into legs for the platform.

Gary was attracted by a woodpile 20 feet behind the saw.

The saw-blade caught the end of one strip, suddenly hurling the strip backward. One end struck young Gary in the lower chest.

The Gallup Poll

Poor Job Done on Asia Policy, Majority of U. S. Voters Say

By Dr. George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 19.—An overwhelming majority of Americans think that the United States Government has done a poor job in handling our foreign policy in Asia.

A wide variety of mistakes are named by voters interviewed on the question in a national opinion survey, with no one item getting more than 20 percent of the vote.

The largest number criticize the military on the grounds of poor preparation and inadequate intelligence in Korea.

Still others insist that our main mistake was in abandoning Chiang Kai-shek and ignoring the Chinese Nationalists.

Some also say that our major error was in going into Korea in the first place.

All persons questioned in this survey were asked:

"Do you think our Government in Washington has been doing a good job or a poor job of handling our foreign policy in Asia—that is, in Korea, China, etc.?"

The national vote is:

	Democrats	Republicans	Independents
Good job	26%	10%	13%
Fair job	24	15	21
Poor job	39	62	51
No opinion	11	10	15
	100%	100%	100%

Opinion splits along partisan lines, with Republicans more critical of our Asiatic policy than Democrats are. But even among Democrats the weight of opinion is unfavorable, as the following table shows:

All voters in the sample were next asked:

"What mistakes, if any, would you say our Government has made in handling the situation in Asia?"

Here is a summary of the results:

Military situation criticized, poor preparation	18%
Too lenient with Reds, too soft	11
Intervention in Asia a mistake, should have stayed out of Korea	9
Failure to back Chiang	9
Lack of foresight, should have anticipated fighting China	6
Inconsistency in Asia policy	4
Miscellaneous	12
No mistakes made	7
Don't know	25
	101%

The table adds to more than 100 percent because some voters named more than one mistake.

Here are some voters' comments typifying the point of view of those who criticize the military aspects fo our Asiatic policy:

"Our intelligence was weak in not finding out what the Chinese would do."

Student Nets $600,000 in Year From Race News Setup

CHICAGO, Dec. 19 (AP).—The Kefauver committee was told today that a University of Miami law student pocketed more than $600,000 profits from a nationwide racing news service last year.

Thomas F. Kelly, general manager of Continental Press, told the United States Senate Crime Investigating body that figure was the share of the service's 1949 gross income of $2,353,000 turned over to owner Edward McBride.

Kelly said he gets $400 a week for his services and also got a little more than $100,000 in a share of the profit last year.

Continental maintains a wire service, furnishing racing information to racing publishers and various distributors.

The Senate commttee spent the entire day delving into the complicated relationship between Continental and its distributors. The committee is seeking to establish if many of the distributors actually are dummy corporations.

McBride, a student at the University of Miami, obtained ownership of Continental sometime after the 1946 assassination of James M. Ragen of Chicago, the former owner.

Kelly, McBride's uncle, said that Continental was set up on the advice of lawyers to put as many steps as possible between the company and the bookies.

Operations Described

He said Continental sold only to organizations that publish scratch sheets and to 24 distributors. The distributors, he added, sell to subdistributors who furnish the service to bookies.

An attorney told the committee earlier that he paid $12,000 in rewards to two former Chicago policemen for their efforts to solve the still officially unsolved Ragen slaying.

Henry Hilton, a Chicago attorney for Continental Press, told the committee he paid the money in installments to former Police Capt. Tom Connelly and the late William Drury, a former lieutenant.

Drury was killed by an assassin September 25 as an investigator for the Senate committee sought to contact him for information on the Chicago crime setup.

The Ragen estate offered a $25,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of his killers.

Connelly and Drury, working on the police force at the time, found three persons who identified three men as the Ragen slayers. Two of the witnesses told a grand jury later, however, that Drury and Connelly forced them to give such testimony.

Officers Were Ousted

The two officers then were ousted from the police force.

They were fired for refusing to wave immunity and testify before a grand jury on how they obtained their evidence in the Ragen case.

Hilton, explaining the payment, said, "they got into a pretty good jam, so they figured they were entitled to this reward for what they had done, although there was no conviction."

Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) the committee chairman, said that Virginia Hill, one-time girl friend of the late Benjamin "Bugsy" Siegel, will not be summoned to testify at this time. She will be called later.

She became a mother three weeks ago and sent the committee a doctor's certificate saying the trip and rigors of testifying would endanger her health.

The committee was told that after Fuller Warren was elected Governor of Florida in November, 1948, the word was passed all over Florida that "the mob had gotten control" of State gambling.

The testimony was given by Leo Joseph Carroll of Miami, a former salesman for Intrastate News Service.

He said it was all "gossip and rumor" but that the attitude of his employers changed and "everything became mysterious." He said Intrastate had "been a friendly organization before."

In Tallahassee, Fla., Governor Warren declined comment on Carroll's testimony.

Carroll said wire service to the S. and G. Syndicate in Florida was cut off in February, 1949, but was restored after Harry Russell of Chicago was accepted as a partner.

Committee investigators contend the S. & G Syndicate, which reportedly served bookies, was pressured into accepting Russell by having its service cut off temporarily. Russell has been described as a front for Chicago interests.

Md. Children To Get Booklets On State Subjects

ANNAPOLIS, Dec. 18 (AP).—A group of technicians and school teachers at a meeting today drew up plans to teach Maryland's school children more about their home State through readable "bulletins" on technical subjects.

The compiled pamphlets, one on conservation and the other on oysters, will be written "on the sixth grade level," said John P. Trimmer, director of the State Department of Information and a member of the editorial committee.

However, they will be directed at the third through the twelfth grades.

"So far as we know, this is the first time that this has been attempted anywhere," Trimmer said.

Poker-Faced Polar Bears

Although animal keepers of the circus easily recognize most of their charges by facial expression, the "poker-faced" polar bears have sometimes stumped the experts, notes the National Geographic Society. One trainer painted identifying spots on his newly acquired polar bears to help out untill familiarity with their habits made it possible for him to tell them apart.

Senate Votes Slot Machine Ban

Because Senator George W. Malone (R., Nev.) had such a bad case of laryngitist he could hardly speak, the Senate yesterday finally passed the long-stalled bill to ban interstate shipment of slot machines.

The Senate-House conference report on the measure now is expected to win final House approval today. This would send it to President Truman for his approval, which also is anticipated.

Last September, Malone talked for 11 hours and 10 minutes against the bill and he intended to kill it for good this time with another filibuster. But yesterday he was able to talk only 15 minutes, and that in a hoarse whisper. After he quit, the Senate accepted the conference report by a voice vote with only a few scattered nays.

The prohibiting bill, aimed at smashing the multi-million-dollar slot machine racket, originated at last Feburary's conference here of state and local law enforcement officials. That was the Attorney General's conference on crime. The ban also has been indorsed by the Senate Crime Investigating Committee.

Under its terms, it would be illegal to ship a slot machine, or parts therefor from one state to another, unless the state into which it is shipped passed a new law making it legal. Thus even Nevada, where gambling is legal state-wide, would have to take legislative action to merit exemption.

The slot machine manufacturers, all of whom are in Chicago, would be required to register with the Justice Department and file monthly reports of sales and shipments. Another provision would bar the "one-armed bandits" from all military and other Federal Reservations.

The District, which already bars slot machines, is included in the new legislation.

Several senators, including Taft (R., Ohio), Holland (D., Fla.) and O' Conor (D., Md.) wanted assurances from Chairman Johnson (D., Colo.) of the Senate Commerce Committee that the bill would not effect pari-mutual machines at legal race tracks. Johnson, in charge of the measure, said it would apply only to slot machines.

2 Chosen to Help Hoffman Direct Ford Foundation

PASADENA, Calif., Dec. 19 (U.P.)—Paul G. Hoffman announced tonight Chancellor Robert M. Hutchins of University of Chicago and Chester C. Davis, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, will "leave their important posts" to become asociate directors of the Ford Foundation.

Hoffman resigned as director of the Economic Cooperation Administration to become director of the 238-million-dollar charity organization formed by the late Edsel Ford.

The Ford Foundation is scheduled to go into operation January 1. Its aims are to establish peace, strengthen democracy, economy and education and to study social behavior and human relations.

"Mr. Davis and Mr. Hutchins will join me in Pasadena shortly and the three of us together will be responsible for further development of the progress of the foundation and its execution," Hoffman said in a statement issued by the foundation.

Teller Caught on Spree With Bank Funds

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Dec. 19 (U.P.)—Stacks of money made him so excited, a young Miami Beach bank teller told the FBI today, he finaly scooped up $30,000 worth for a grand fling.

Ramon Earl Irwin, 21, ended his spree in the arms of G-men as he drove up to his sister's house here late last night.

He had traveled 1700 miles from Miami Beach, where he allegedly lifted the money from his cage at the First National Bank Friday.

The FBI said Irwin had taken a plane to New Orleans, where he paid $2750 for an almost new Oldsmobile. He spent more on a diamond ring and a splurge in the French quarter. But he still had $26,075 in two cheap suitcases and $598.15 in his pockets when arrested.

Fellow-workers back at Miami Beach regarded him as "a very excellent employe with a nice personality."

The bank grew suspicious, however, when he failed to report for work at noon Monday without telephoning an explanation. Officials found that he had taken all the currency from his compartment.

United States Commissioner Leslie Nicholson ordered Irwin held under $30,000 bond pending a hearing Friday.

$5,700 More Found In Bank Holdup Loot

Another $5700 of $64,176 taken in two Greater Washington bank holdups was recovered yesterday, the FBI reported.

This brought to $33,705 the amount found by Metropolitan police and the FBI investigating the bank robberies. The Spring Valley branch of the National Metropolitan Bank was robbed of $35,828 December 7, and the Shepherd Park branch of the Hamilton National Bank was robbed of $28,351 last February.

The FBI said $4800 of the $5700 recovered yesterday was found in a safety deposit vault of a Washington bank. It was in the name of Nicholas James Carrigan, 22, of 518 8th st. ne. He is one of three men arrested and charged with the two holdups.

Another $700 was found in the same bank, in a savings account opened by Carrigan December 12, and $200 more was in his name in another savings account, the FBI said.

Carrigan was carrying $220 with him when arrested, and another $8445 of the loot which police said was deposited to his name in an Arlington bank, was recovered earlier.

Coroner Says:

No Murder Indicated in Skull Finding

Making no bones about it, Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, said yesterday that remains of a shattered skeleton excavated Monday at 12th and E sts. nw showed two things:

1. A man, a child, and possibly othe radults had been buried there about 100 years ago.

2. The owner of the skull apparently died a natural death, despite a hole in the head. The dent "did not reach the inter-cranial cavity and therefore could not have been caused by a mortal blow," he said.

The coroner said he would not issue a report until workmen who dug up the bones during excavation for a new building had finished their job. There may be still other skeletons in the subterranean closet, Dr. MacDonald opined.

Capt. Jeremiah Flaherty of the Homicide Squad said his men wouldn't be interested in the possibility that one or more murders were committed because:

1. Witnesses and prosecutors would be hard to find 100 years after the act.

2. His records go back only 20 years.

Woman Boasts Of Intimacies With 269 GIs

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Dec. 19 (U.P.).—A self-educated blonde who boasted of intimacies with 269 servicemen was held today for a lunacy test while authorities tried to determine whether she was a bona fide sex expert.

The 36-year-old woman, whose identity was not revealed, was committed to the San Antonio State Mental Hospital after authorities studied her case histories of the sex problems of more than 700 servicemen, 269 of whom, she said, had been her lovers.

She said she had never had normal sex relations with any of them, however, and was only gathering information for a survey on sexology because she wanted to be a social worker. The woman said her marriage to an older man had failed.

Agents of the FBI and the Army counter-intelligence corps became interested when officers searched her lush apartment and found biographical data on more than 700 servicemen. Detective Tom Farley said many letters in the file were from officers and men overseas and contained information of military value.

Police found a list of book titles dealing with Soviet Russia, the Near East and world politics pasted inside one notebook but she said they were part of a plan to "educate" her husband who disapproved of her views on sex.

She said she was "self-educated" from reading book club selections for 13 years and that the list had no special significance—that she read "everything I can get my hands on."

She questioned servicemen about their military duties, she said, "because you can tell about a man's brain by his job." She also asked about their physical characteristics, background and premarital and postmarital sexual relations.

Federal officers declined comment on whether they would file charges against her.

CAPITALISM

Nothing is superior except by comparison

WHEN we compare the conditions of nations and people in anti-capitalistic countries with the security, prosperity, happiness and well-being of our people under United States capitalism, we appreciate our privilege of living in a capitalistic, democratic country.

The basic principle of the free, capitalistic system which we have developed in our country affords opportunity to the individual who is willing to use his talents to the extent of his ability and desire to produce—to accumulate something for investment in a home, a farm, in savings accounts, bonds and other securities, life insurance, the education of his children, and comforts of life—and become a capitalist.

The following facts give us a deep appreciation of what capitalism has done and is doing for our country and its people.

Private capital in the form of taxes and purchases of United States Government Bonds made it possible for us to spend three hundred thirty billion dollars in carrying out our part of the program in winning World War II. This, of course, is unimportant when we consider the loss of life and permanent and partial disability which our youth sustained and which cannot be measured in dollars.

Our participation in World War II has left us today with a national debt of two hundred fifty-seven billion dollars, but on the credit side we find that our annual national income, at the current rate, is equal to 90% of our total national debt. Of this total national debt, thirty-nine billion dollars are in treasury obligations owned by Government agencies, so our net debt is slightly over two hundred eighteen billion dollars.

The United States free enterprise business system is operating at its highest level, furnishing employment to sixty-two million people at the highest hourly and weekly earnings ever recorded. Stockholders and corporations, after paying the highest peacetime taxes in the post-war years, have had the highest net average earnings in history from their investment.

Our farmers had cash income from marketing last year amounting to twenty-seven billion five hundred million dollars, the highest on record.

Total farm assets of our country amount to slightly more than one hundred twenty-seven billion dollars, against which there is an indebtedness of only twelve billion four hundred million dollars. Thus our farmers have ownership equity of over 90 per cent in their farms.

In non-farm homes, counting apartment buildings with four or less families, and all valued at a total of two hundred billion dollars, our home owners have an equity of one hundred fifty-eight billion dollars—a substantial ownership of 79 per cent.

Therefore, as a result of the opportunity provided by our free-enterprise capitalistic system, the people of our nation have a free and clear ownership in their homes and farms of 83.4 per cent.

Our people have savings of more than one hundred thirty-six billion dollars in government bonds and savings accounts.

An additional ninety-seven billion dollars are on deposit in commercial bank accounts.

Our men and women have a cash investment of sixty billion dollars in life insurance policies.

A high percentage of our working people are provided with unemployment insurance, sickness, accident and retirement benefits, financed by employers, employees and government. Others who are not covered by these plans and who find themselves in need are provided for by governmental and social institutions.

We are increasing our efforts to improve the standard of living of the people in the lower income brackets.

The United States, with only six per cent of the world population and seven per cent of its land area, under its democratic, capitalistic system, before World War II, produced forty-seven per cent of the world's manufactured goods, but what is more important, ninety per cent of that production was consumed within our own borders. Today we are producing over fifty per cent of the world's manufactured goods, of which a substantial percentage is for other countries.

Capitalism is backing freedom of worship and providing increasing educational opportunities by constantly giving more and more support to the two things upon which our democratic, cultural civilization depends—spiritual and educational values.

We have a permanent investment in churches and schools of eighteen billion five hundred million dollars and are spending annually eight billion dollars for religious and educational purposes.

Membership in the churches is increasing at a much faster rate than the increase in the population, and in our Sunday Schools at an even greater rate.

In the past thirty years, elementary school enrollment has increased 13.5 per cent, high school enrollment 146.1 per cent and college and university enrollment 351.6 per cent.

Our public school expenditures per pupil enrolled have gone up from $48.02 in 1920 to $132.06 in 1947, or 175.0 per cent.

Since 1920 the population of our country has increased 43 per cent and the investment in school and college equipment has increased 571 per cent.

Since the beginning of our industrial and scientific development in the early 1800's, the capitalistic system, due to individual freedom, initiative and ingenuity, has given the world more of the comforts and conveniences of life than mankind had received in the previous 5000 years of civilization.

Under this system our people as a whole are happy and united, are increasing their capital and enjoying a fuller spiritual, cultural and material life.

Today our scientific and industrial knowledge and experience in the various fields of peaceful activity are open to the rest of the world, and in this respect we have joined with other like-minded nations in contributing to the technical assistance program of the United Nations.

No nation, no individual, no venture, no private or public institution, no program for the welfare of people can progress without capital.

It is each individual's duty to contribute to the preservation, protection and improvement of our democratic civilization on a basis which is sound and fair to all our people.

Reds Attack Below Parallel, Near Seoul

after the landing at Inchon, September 15.

In northeast Korea, the United States troops remaining on the steadily shrinking Hungnam beachhead broke up two fierce new Communist attacks Tuesday with the aid of Allied planes, guns and warships.

Hour by hour the fighting swirled ever closer to Hungnam itself.

Meanwhile Eighth Army headquarters said fighting has broken out between South Korean and Korean Communist troops on a 30-mile front south of the thirty-eighth parallel.

An Eighth Army briefing officer said the fighting was in the vicinity of Chunchon.

Chunchon is 45 miles northeast of the Republican capital of Seoul. It is 10 miles south of the thirty-eighth parallel—dividing line between North and South Korea.

Associated Press Correspondent Tom Lambert reported from the beachhead that United Nations lines were so close to the coast that soldiers and sailors could watch carrier-based bombing and strafing attacks on massed Chinese and North Korean troops ringing the perimeter.

Navy and marine pilots stabbed hardest at Reds in the ridges directly east of Hungnam. These extend into the sea and form the upper arm of the harbor. From the ridges the enemy could look down into the harbor.

A Tenth Corps intelligence officer on the beachhead said 7000 to 8000 newly equipped North Korean troops—forward combat elements of three completely reorganized North Korean divisions—had taken over from Chinese Reds on that hilly, eastern flank.

On the flatlands to the west, the veteran Chinese Seventy-ninth Division was held at bay by heavy naval gunfire and massed artillery.

Quick and accurate artillery fire pouring out 500 rounds of shells in a single 20-minute period—stunned one company of North Koreans attacking Seventh Division lines before dawn. An estimated 200 Korean Reds were killed by the hard-working artillerymen before the thrust could develop into a major attack.

A second and heavier predawn attack by an estimated battalion of Chinese made a minor penetration in the Third Division sector of the defense line. The attackers were beaten off, the lost ground was regained.

The two attacks on Tuesday brought to six the number of assults the Reds have made in a 24-hour period in an attempt to crack the U. N. perimeter. In the bitterly cold weather doughboys braced for even heavier attacks on their foxhole positions.

Lambert reported that the United States Air Force had abandoned Yonpo Airfield, 3½ miles southwest of Hungnam, on Sunday. As Chinese troops approached, rearguard airmen made a run for the new lines after burning four disabled planes on the field and setting fire to their barracks and cook shacks.

General MacArthur's staff officers pointed out that Yonpo airport was not given up until another emergency airstrip was in operation, closer to the harbor area.

Yonpo field was the scene of a giant airlift which saved the lives of hundreds of wounded. They were evacuated after the trapped United States marines and infantrymen pulled back from the Changjin Reservoir area to the northwest.

The latest Red attacks at Hungnam were aimed primarily at securing positions on high ground east of the harbor.

Artillery sharpshooters, who zeroed in on the Chinese and North Koreans, drew high praise from the Tenth Corps intelligence officer, Col. William Quinn.

"Prisoners say they are trying to hit us in force," he said, "but every time the officers get men massed for an attack, our artillery scatters them. They just can't get started."

Maj. Gen. Edward A. Almond, the Tenth Corps commander, was satisfied with the situation Tuesday.

After a visit to his battalion commanders, Almond said "things are going excellently."

All through the night, the heavy cruisers Rochester and St. Paul and their escorting destroyers lobbed shells across the sky, their red tracer tails bright in the darkness.

Field dispatches made no reference to the battleship Missouri, previously identified in action at Hungnam.

350 Soviet Subs Now in Service, Jane's Ships Says

LONDON (Wednesday) Dec. 20 (AP).—The Soviet Union is rushing to build up a navy "already far in excess of the normal requirements of defense," Jane's Fighting Ships said today.

The authoritative yearbook said there are persistent reports that the Russians put into service last June a 35,000 to 37,000-ton battleship with towers for firing guiding missiles.

Another of the same type was said to have been launched in March, with still a third under construction.

Jane's reported that 350 to 370 Russians submarines are believed already in service, with 120 more building.

"The capacity of Soviet shipbuilding, now largely under the supervision of German specialists and bolstered by foreign labor, is reported to be twice that of 10 years ago," it added.

G. B. Brophy Named Acheson Consultant

Gerald B. Brophy, New York corporation lawyer, has been appointed a special consultant to Secretary of State Dean Acheson, it was announced yesterday.

State Department officials said the 49-year-old Brophy will advise the department on general foreign policy matters. He is the senior partner of the New York law firm of Chadbourne, Parke, Whiteside, Wolff & Brophy. He also is a director of North American Aviation, Inc., and General Aniline and Film Corp.

Italy Plans Further Rearming; Seeks Aid

ROME, Dec. 19 (NYHT).—Italy notified the United States officially here today that it plans an immediate additional 400-million-dollar rearmament program.

The Rome government told American diplomatic repreesntatives that Italy "hopes" the United States will bear part of the cost.

North Koreans Tell of Plans To Take Seoul

TOKYO, Dec. 19 (U.P.).—The North Korean government said in a broadcast tonight that the Communist army intends to invade South Korea, capture Seoul, establish a unified Korean government and drive American troops from the country.

The broadcast over the new Kanggye radio implied Chinese Communist troops would take part in a drive south of the thirty-eighth parallel.

"Chinese volunteer units are being reinforced and they will fight and cooperate with the Korean people's army to the final day of unification of Korea and until the invader troops of America are driven from the territory of Korea," the broadcast said.

It quoted a statement "to the people of Seoul" issued by the Supreme Council of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea.

Now Let's Have Unity

President Truman has responded in the traditional manner to the Republican demand for the dismissal of Secretary Acheson. Pointing to President Lincoln's refusal to oust Secretary of State Seward at the behest of Republican Senators, Mr. Truman said: "So do I refuse to dismiss Acheson." That ought to settle the controversy. The fact is that the Republicans left Mr. Truman no alternative to the course he has taken—unless he had been willing to turn over to them the responsibility for the making of foreign policy. As the executive head of the Nation and its spokesman in foreign affairs, he could not recognize the right of any group to say that he should displace the man of his choice from the most important Cabinet post.

To be sure, there have been a number of instances in which congressional investigations and congressional opinion have contributed to the dismissal of Cabinet members. The Joint Committee on the Conduct of the War in Lincoln's day applied some of the pressure that forced out Secretary of War Cameron. The Senate also played a prominent part in the ouster of Attorney General Daugherty by President Coolidge. But the hand of the President can never be forced in such matters, and when any group attempts it the result is almost certain to be a factional row rather than a new face in the Cabinet.

The inexcusable aspect of the Republican maneuver is that it brought politics into an area where, in the present critical situation, only patriotism and considerations of the national interest should enter. The same is true of the effort to force congressional review of the understanding between President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee and of the agreement worked out at Brussels for the defense of Europe. The Senate approved the general policy that is being followed when it consented to the ratification of the North Atlantic Treaty. Congress will have an opportunity to review the new aspects of the policy when it passes appropriations for the American contingent of the proposed European army. Meanwhile, it is properly resisting obstruction.

What is needed is an approach to these momentous questions on their merits. As the President pointed out yesterday, "This Nation needs the wisdom of all its people. This is a time of great peril. It is a time for unity, for real bipartisanship." The true aim is not to abolish criticism but to strip it of all partisanship and strengthen the will to work together in spite of some differences that cannot be resolved.

Welding The Americas

If the United States had not taken the lead in calling a conference of Western Hemisphere Foreign Ministers, it is a reasonable bet that the Latin Americans themselves would have called one promptly. For there is much that the American community needs to talk over; the meeting will be a reminder of that at Rio just after Pearl Harbor. The Latins are concerned about the President's declaration of national emergency and its effect on their economies. The United States is anxious not only to obtain assured sources of raw materials for the defense effort, but also to enlist the efforts of the Latin Americans more enthusistically in resistance to aggression.

From the standpoint of the United States first priority must go to the continued flow of raw materials such as petroleum, tin, copper, manganese and the like as well as to the development of new sources of necessities such as rubber. The lapse of certain trade agreements at the moment makes new understandings essential. As a corollary, the United States will be interested in working with the Latin Americans to help them prevent the inflation which is sure to be encouraged by the combination of high raw material prices and restricted imports. Internal security—uniform measures to deal with Communist sabotage and subversion—will surely be on the agenda as will the question of other Latin contributions to the free world defense.

For their part the Latin Americans are certain to ask this country some embarrassing questions. Probably foremost in their minds will be the question whether, if they cooperate fully on raw materials, they may be cast off when the emergency is over; the sad experience of Brazil with respect to rubber development in World War II remains a sore point. Latin Americans are still bitter about the removal of price controls which had the effect of devaluing their dollar holdings before they could buy their deferred needs. Chile is likely to ask rather pointedly about the consistency of the copper import tax reimposed by Congress. And though the ill-natured Gillette coffee report seems to have been buried, it has left a lot of ruffled feelings which the United States will have to smooth.

Probably the most important step the United States can take is to work out a system of equality of sacrifice. This means the sort of export controls that will take into account the effect of shortages on national economies and will apportion available goods fairly. Moreover, the Latin Americans need to feel that their contributions are important, that they are being consulted, and that the United States is sharing essential information with them as partners. This implies that the Latins themselves must assume more responsibility in the defense of freedom. The strongest argument for unity is the fact that the freedom of Latin America is as inextricably bound up in the present struggle as is that of the United States.

Terror In Korea

No matter how this Korean campaign may turn out in the end, there is hardly much doubt about who the chief losers have been. They have been the Korean people, whose soil has been fought over twice, and now seems likely to be fought over a third time. They have watched their dams, their rice paddies, their cultivated fields, representing the patient peasant labor of generations, sacrificed to the exigencies of war. For a people that has always lived close to the border line of famine, it has been frightful experience. Even so, it is not the worst, for homes by the hundreds have been destroyed, families disrupted, children orphaned.

Yet it is the very nature of modern warfare that humble people, ignorant of politics, knowing little or nothing of the causes of strife, should be the chief victims. Even in eighteenth century Europe, before the rise of nationalism, when such concepts as "the nation in arms" and the levee en masse were unknown, when wars, though frequent, were fought by small professional armies according to prescribed rules, those who got into the path of conflict were likely to suffer, even though the distinction between combatant and noncombatant was sharply drawn.

Another important thing to remember is that for the Koreans this is a civil war. In all ages civil wars have been more terrible for the civilian population than wars against a foreign enemy. One of the concomitants of civil war is what we call, after the French Revolutionary example, "terror." This means the punishment visited by the party in possession upon real or suspected enemies within its lines. During the earlier phases of the campaign, when the allied armies were pushed down to a precarious foothold upon the tip of the peninsula, the Korean people suffered from the ruthless and well-organized Communist terror. Persons thought to be sympathetic to the government of Syngman Rhee, and those who possessed property, were dispossessed and murdered or driven into hiding. After the liberation of South Korea the survivors reemerged and were presently demanding vengeance for the sufferings they had endured and the friends and families they had lost. As in liberated Europe in 1944-45, a general hunt for "collaborators" and "fifth-columnists" began. And after the tide of battle in the North had been turned by the intervention of the Chinese Communists, the hunger for vengeance was stimulated by new fears and hysterias.

This explains the great counter-terror now raging in Southern Korea and especially in the vicinity of Seoul, in which, it is said, neither children nor the aged are being spared. Evidently, as in so many other civil wars, the principle of "blood guilt" is being applied. In less than five days more than 800 persons have been put to death by rifle and machine-gun fire. British and American soldiers, already well experienced in horror, are said to have been sickened at the sight of these mass executions, as well they may have been. Two American Catholic priests, Father Patrick O'Connor of this city, and Father George Carroll, a Maryknoll missioner, have been importuning the South Korean authorities to put an end to slaughter, apparently with no success.

No one who has read of the noyades at Nantes or the fusillades at Lyons, which occurred in what was then deemed the most civilized nation of Europe, can dismiss these South Korean horrors as merely another example of Oriental ferocity. But the South Korean terror has added a new and gruesome complication to an already difficult situation. The excutions have seriously compromised the moral position of the United Nations and have provided the Communists with a most valuable propaganda weapon; and therefore some means must be found of putting an end to them.

Eisenhower's Task

General Eisenhower's appointment as supreme commander of the North Atlantic military forces has been so long in coming that some of the psychological impact has worn off. In agreeing to the appointment at Brussels the United States has gambled that the naming of a supreme commander—before there are many troops to command—will galvanize the European allies into action. The need is to follow the appointment with precise military commitments and production schedules. Even General Eisenhower is no miracle worker. He should not be expected to plead with the individual governments to give shape to SHAPE. Although there are overtones of diplomacy in his job, his primary task is to command, not to wheedle.

Scarcely less important than the appointment of the supreme commander and agreement on German participation is the formation of a new Defense Production Board, which presumably will have an American chairman. This will have the vital function of bringing real division of labor in munitions: each country must produce what it can produce best. An example of what must come is Lord Tedder's suggestion that American factories produce British-type planes. Integrated production is the necessary corollary of a unified army, and it must come just as rapidly.

The magnitude of the military task may be seen from the fact that present available troops are little more than a token force. The United States and Britain each have two divisions in Germany and France has one; these will form the nucleus of General Eisenhower's command. France has promised three additional divisions immediately, and Britain is readying an armored division. Reportedly the United States plans to send three more divisions within a year. But these steps are a far cry from the publicly announced goal of 55 divisions by 1953.

Moreover, German participation is extremely uncertain. Although Germany has been allotted 150,000 men in the total international force, consisting of 25 combat teams, tactical air units and undisclosed sea elements, the Bonn government is still coy or dubious. Perhaps political readjustments with respect to Germany will facilitate an understanding. But there can be no thought of buying German participation. And until and unless the Germans indicate a willingness to come in, the plans must proceed without them.

It is important, too, that planners avoid a Maginot Line complex—that the forces be flexible enough to meet unorthodox enemy strategy, that they be prepared to cope with paratroop landings and extensive guerilla activity. Perhaps more essential than anything else is the generation of enthusiasm in Europe for self-defense. Unless the Europeans believe in the international force and work for it wholeheartedly, it is bound to fail. One encouraging sign is the fact that the agreement on the international force, including German units, was forthcoming in the face of Russian threats. This took courage which is the basis of self-defense.

At best, however, it is a gamble that an adequate defense can be built up before Russia moves. Speed is of the essence; nothing could be worse than to have token forces trapped. That is why there must be a definite timetable of performance—a timetable in which Congress, among others, will be interested. For unless plans are translated promptly into realities, then this country in its own interest must revise its strategy.

Merger Control At Last

For nearly a quarter of a century the Federal Trade Commission has been importuning Congress to close a loophole in the Clayton Act by prohibiting corporations from purchasing the assets of any other firm if the acquisition would substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. Under the law as it stands, the Federal Trade Commission is empowered to prevent stock purchases that restrain competition, but it cannot prevent mergers resulting from the outright purchase of physical assets. This week the Senate passed an Administration-endorsed bill plugging this loophole in the law. A companion bill was approved by the House more than a year ago, and the conference bill now awaits the President's signature.

The public may be surprised to hear that the Senate spent a good part of two days debating this loophole-closing amendment to the Clayton Act, despite the gravity of the crisis confronting the country. However, it is just as essential to establish safeguards against trade restraints and monopoly and to protect the independence of small business today as it was before we embarked on our mobilization program. Indeed, Senator Kefauver declared it is more important to stop the increase of monopolistic mergers during the mobilization period than at any other time. Big corporations producing raw materials for defense will be encouraged to expand production of finished goods and squeeze out or buy out independent manufacturers by channeling supplies to their own fabricating subsidiaries unless preventive legislation is enacted. The danger of this kind of encroachment is very real, and it is a strong argument for strengthening the antitrust laws, apart from the fact that the Clayton Act amendment furthers our long-range objective of preserving free competition.

This long overdue legislation will not interfere with defense production. The Defense Production Act exempts from the prohibitions of the antitrust laws and the Federal Trade Commission Act those voluntary agreements found by the President to be "in the public interest as contributing to the national defense." Furthermore, the legislation would not affect mergers already consummated. It applies only to corporations in interstate commerce; it prohibits only mergers that substantially lessen competition; it does not prevent the purchase of bankrupt companies or ban sales of assets by a small corporation to another small corporation. And it liberalizes existing restrictions on mergers effected by sales of stock. No wonder the bill passed both House and Senate by impressive majorities.

Rescued By Laryngitis

The same voice that enabled Senator Malone to defy the entire Congress in preventing passage of the antislot machine bill has now done him in. It is a fittingly ironic touch that the Nevada Senator's inability to resume his filibuster because of laryngitis enabled the Senate to approve the conference report by voice vote and clear the last obstacle to enactment of the bill. This is probably the first time a filibuster has ever been broken by literal speechlessness, and Chairman Johnson of the Interstate Commerce Committee is to be commended for his acute sense of timing in bringing up the bill. In any case Senator Malone has had a fairer break than given by most of the machines he has so tirelessly defended.

"Unhappy Happy"

The December 17 editorial "Unhappy Happy" lacks sense and meaning. It sounds like it was written by Fred Saigh or inspired by him. For years I have read with much profit the discussions on your editorial page. All of them have been backed by facts and good reasoning. If any good reasoning or common sense can be found in "Unhappy Happy" I am unable to discern it. Certainly no one who knows baseball or "Happy" wrote it.

Chandler is conceded by friend and foe alike as probably the finest Governor in Kentucky history. Behind that smile of Chandler's is a lifetime of clean living. Happy doesn't drink intoxicants, smoke or indulge in the telling of smutty stories. He lives a clean life and is the idol of millions of kids and grownups. When Happy talk to boys about the "good life," he knows what he is talking about, yet Chandler is as tough a man as you would want to tangle with in physical combat.

Last year Chandler came to your "Celebrities Tournament." He was not well at the time, but travelled from his home in Kentucky to help make your party a success. He even showed up for the second day of the tournament and played in the rain and the mud. Very few others showed on that day. Then he hurried back to his hotel to combat a touch of the "flu." He had a smile for everyone during the tournament.

Baseball belongs to the people. They want an honest man for commissioner who will not worry about offending anyone with a just decision. If you or anyone else has any facts that will show that Happy has not been fair, honest and true to the principles of good baseball, please state them. The fans will welcome these facts. What the fans resent is the news stories that "one club owner ordered the whisky bottles removed from the hotel suite of the club owners before Happy arrived" that he was then dismissed without any reason being given for the dismissal. If The Washington Post editorial department knows the reason for the dismissal will it let the public in on the facts?

Finally, The Post editorial writer writes off Happy completely by nominating Jim Farley and concluding that Happy has no chance. This in the face of reports that only one vote is needed to return Happy to power.

Planning Commission

It appears that the request of the National Park and Planning Commission for more power over the District area has been stymied for the present, and for my part I hope they don't get the authority. I hope that the various civic groups in the District will wake up to what the extension of greater power over the District by a Federal agency means if necessary.

The commission plans and acts upon the premise that the wish of the people of the city is secondary; that this is a Federal city, that it must be devolped on a long-range basis according to what will be best for the people of the country as a whole, as the commission sees it.

That this policy has cost the taxpayers of the District money, and is still costing them money, wthout their having an adequate return. The development of the Maryland and Virginia suburbs by a Federal agency will undoubtedly be of more benefit to those people than to people in the District; yet the District eventually has to pay part of the cost.

Its plans do not always have the sanction of the District Commissioners, who are responsible to the people here. The Fort Drive is characteristic of the grandiose plans of the commission—17 or 18 years going, and not started yet.

Its 30-year plan is a rehash of many projects proposed before. Some have merit, such as moving the Federal agencies out of leased buildings and the temporary buildings, and into a wider area. The development of East Capitol st. by building State and national buildings on it (removing existing buildings first, of course) may be feasible and it may not.

Let's have some discussion by D. C. citizens on the value of this body to the city.

Precision Prayer

Isn't there some way your newspaper could coordinate into one mighty group all those who are praying for our fighting men? Perhaps even miracles could happen—but at least, those gallant men of ours could face danger with even greater courage if the potential prayer force of the Washington area alone were harnessed. If their fate is on our minds night and day—even though we may at the moment have no husbands, sons or brothers in that danger zone—how much it would mean to our fellow Washingtonians concerned over their dear ones to know we were petitioning Almighty God in their behalf!

Couldn't an outstanding local clergyman—or a rotation of clergymen of the three major faiths—write a short daily prayer to be prayed at a certain hour, say 1 p. m., by all who wished to join in? Surely precision praying ought to have as much effect as precision bombing. VERNE CAUDLE.

Nationalist Help

I think your cartoon of December 14 is ill-timed and in bad taste, showing as it does Chiang Kai-shek carrying a placard stating "Chinese people are crazy about me" while on his back is the imprint of a huge foot, indicating that he was kicked out of China.

This is a strange interpretation to put on the heroic fight of Chiang's army against the hordes of Chinese Reds backed by Russia, the same Reds who are now murdering our boys in Korea. Are these fanatics who threw Chiang out supposed to be the Chinese people?

Our unwillingness to accept Chiang's offer of a half-million trained veterans in Formosa, which could mean the saving of thousands of American lives, is no credit to the policy-makers of the Administration, but fortunately press reports now indicate that a new and saner attitude is contemplated.

"Mr. Acheson's Troubles"

The usually responsible and provocative Mr. Walter Lippmann has, it seems to me, been considerably more provocative than responsible in his December 14 column on "Mr. Acheson's Troubles."

In the first place, I submit that Mr. Lippmann has done a disservice to some of his own basic tenets of foreign policy by writing off Mr. Acheson so cavalierly and giving advice to "the new Secretary of State" at the moment when Secretary Acheson is in flight to Brussels to speed the rearming of western Europe. The Secretary has given no indication of quitting his post and the President has many times reaffirmed his complete satisfaction with Mr. Acheson's performance during a period of unparalleled international crisis.

Dean Acheson has achieved the confidence of the free peoples of the world as have few of his predecessors and none of his detractors. The acceptance of his resignation would diminish American prestige and alienate our allies. It would weaken the United Nations just as surely as the replacement of Trygve Lie as Secretary General of the U. N., under Soviet pressure, would have done. It has been the over-all policies of Secretary Acheson which, during the past six months, have breathed life into that international body.

It is precisely because President Truman and Secretary Acheson have made great efforts to achieve unity that Mr. Lippmann "accepts" the Secretary's resignation and seeks to "repeal" the 1948 presidential election. His attack on "Mr. Truman, who is a professional politician, and Mr. Acheson, who is an amateur politician," is in effect an attack on the effort to build a bipartisan foreign policy.

Has not Mr. Lippmann been one of the stanchest advocates of bipartisanship in foreign affairs? Yet he now accuses the President and the Secretary of State of trying 'to play politics with a question of the highest national significance.' Does Mr. Lippmann suggest that foreign policy should be conducted without any regard for congressional realties? Is it his proposal that the opposition, no matter how powerful, should be totally disregarded? Does he contend that the Administration's efforts to unify the country should be abandoned in favor of a no-holds-barred internal fight which would inevitably endanger the elements of unity which now exist?

The accusation of playing politics seems well justified, but it is misplaced. It seems perfectly clear that a small but powerful group of intransigent and desperate Republicans has sought to make political capital of the peril in which the free world, including the United States, now finds itself. They have impugned the motives and the integrity of our national leaders. They have indulged in indiscriminate name-calling. They have sought to set impossible conditions on the passage of essential legislation to meet the crisis.

On at least one point I can agree with Mr. Lippmann, namely, that the efforts to "placate" the opposition have been something less than successful. Despite the naming of key Republican personalities to high office in the field of foreign affairs, despite all the legislative concessions dictated by political necessity, the opposition has not been stilled. Far from it. But in these circumstances it is indeed discouraging to find Walter Lippmann guilty of firing his effective shots at the wrong target.

Whether we are members of Congress or journalists, of whatever party or of no party, let us unite our efforts in support of our leadership now facing one of the most critical moments in our history. JAMES E. MURRAY,

Mental Shock Of Bad News

By Malvina Lindsay

The No's Have It

"IF I DIDN'T know the American people so well, I'd be frightened at some of the things I'm hearing," said Dr. Graph, the eminent cartographer of human behavior.

"If you ask me," said young Mr. Bright, "we're acting like 10-year-olds—that is, a lot of us. When anything adverse happens all we can shriek is 'Who's to blame?' I'm almost hating to talk to people, I hear so much griping, see so many long faces. This negatism is appalling. Do you suppose we caught it from Vishinsky?"

"We're having a little epidemic of emotional illness. We're not good losers. The shock was too great. We'll get hold of ourselves soon. It's just that a lot of our present 'sick' talk, especially that on Capitol Hill, makes us seem pretty childish before the world—and must make good reports for Communist agents."

"I'll say! I actually meet people who think we're about licked, that the Kremlin gang may actually take over here. Where's our guts?"

"They're probably people with a lot of 'priceless' old silver and brand-new television sets and motor cars. Higher living standards and advances in technology certainly make people more vulnerable to insecurity and fear."

"It's all so dumb though—constantly telling the world, including the Chinese and Russians, what fools and knaves our leaders are, how feeble our defenses are, how divided we are internally. And usually, as General Eisenhower has said, the criticism implies 'I am better informed than the person criticized.'"

"WELL THAT'S our system. Be patient. In another 150 years maybe we'll catch up on the responsibilities of free speech. But all that's not so dangerous as the talk that's mushrooming on malice, envy, suspicion, hate — emotions that poison and could destroy us. Such dangerous talk holds the biggest threat of dividing us from each other and from our Allies."

"If you ask me again," said Mr. Bright, "it has a very unhappy connection with the trial of Ilse Koch, the 'Red Witch of Buchenwald.' Remember how we used to wonder how the Nazis could possibly be so sadistic and inhuman? But now sometimes I hear people apply the dirty words of the day to those they don't like and the expression on their faces is such — well, I wouldn't want any one of them for my overseer in a concentration camp."

"But after all the first reaction of almost anyone, except the very rare mature human being, is when emotionally upset to take it out on someone else."

"Yes and that's why I'm uneasy about this anti-Semitic viciousness that showed up in the charges against Mrs. Rosenberg. You should have seen some of the literature attacking her! The type simply sizzled with hate. And there was the old Hitler technique — identifying Jews with communism."

"Of course. But remember that only a small percent of Americans are behaving the way we've been talking about. And they're the type that always makes the most noise. The people who're keeping their heads, who aren't griping or shrieking, aren't heard from. When a child has a tantrum, he's the one the neighbors hear."

"Just the same the noisy ones get a lot of followers—their formulas always seem so simple."

"I ADMIT their danger. And I remember that six months ago some leading authorities in this country on propaganda warned of the very behavior we're witnessing. They predicted that in a deepening political crisis, rabble rousers would use anti-foreignism, racial, religious, class and political hostility, to set Americans against each other, and that this, if unchecked, could transform American society.

"You think that'll happen?"

"No, I think this is a surface sickness."

"I still insist we haven't grown up.

"Who has? All humanity is adolescent—just trying to grow up. That's where I place my great hope in the American people. They can outdistance all the primitive hordes aligned against them in advancing toward maturity.

"But we're basically such an emotional people. We respond so impulsively to upset."

"Yes and we're hounds for self-improvement. I'll bet more people are trying to grow up, wanting to act adult here, than in any other country. What's more, we recognize that such a thing as a neurosis exists. That's more than the Kremlin does. And we are aware of mental and spiritual laws, wistfully eager to follow them, even though we don't often carry through. Unlike the Communists, we admit and are willing to face our own weaknesses. And for all our present negatism, we're basically a positive creative people. We'll soon cut out the delirious talk and get down to business."

"I only hope there won't be too many eavesdroppers in the meantime."

Lord's Prayer

Today and every day, at sunrise, midday and sunset, all nations could broadcast the following song clearly, as though its good singers really meant it:

"Our father . . . in heaven . . . Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth . . ." (King James Bible, Matt. 6:9, 10; Mal. 4:2).

Now Let's Have Unity

President Truman has responded in the traditional manner to the Republican demand for the dismissal of Secretary Acheson. Pointing to President Lincoln's refusal to oust Secretary of State Seward at the behest of Republican Senators, Mr. Truman said: "So do I refuse to dismiss Acheson." That ought to settle the controversy. The fact is that the Republicans left Mr. Truman no alternative to the course he has taken—unless he had been willing to turn over to them the responsibility for the making of foreign policy. As the executive head of the Nation and its spokesman in foreign affairs, he could not recognize the right of any group to say that he should displace the man of his choice from the most important Cabinet post.

To be sure, there have been a number of instances in which congressional investigations and congressional opinion have contributed to the dismissal of Cabinet members. The Joint Committee on the Conduct of the War in Lincoln's day applied some of the pressure that forced out Secretary of War Cameron. The Senate also played a prominent part in the ouster of Attorney General Daugherty by President Coolidge. But the hand of the President can never be forced in such matters, and when any group attempts it the result is almost certain to be a factional row rather than a new face in the Cabinet.

The inexcusable aspect of the Republican maneuver is that it brought politics into an area where, in the present critical situation, only patriotism and considerations of the national interest should enter. The same is true of the effort to force congressional review of the understanding between President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee and of the agreement worked out at Brussels for the defense of Europe. The Senate approved the general policy that is being followed when it consented to the ratification of the North Atlantic Treaty. Congress will have an opportunity to review the new aspects of the policy when it passes appropriations for the American contingent of the proposed European army. Meanwhile, it is properly resisting obstruction.

What is needed is an approach to these momentous questions on their merits. As the President pointed out yesterday, "This Nation needs the wisdom of all its people. This is a time of great peril. It is a time for unity, for real bipartisanship." The true aim is not to abolish criticism but to strip it of all partisanship and strengthen the will to work together in spite of some differences that cannot be resolved.

Welding The Americas

If the United States had not taken the lead in calling a conference of Western Hemisphere Foreign Ministers, it is a reasonable bet that the Latin Americans themselves would have called one promptly. For there is much that the American community needs to talk over; the meeting will be a reminder of that at Rio just after Pearl Harbor. The Latins are concerned about the President's declaration of national emergency and its effect on their economies. The United States is anxious not only to obtain assured sources of raw materials for the defense effort, but also to enlist the efforts of the Latin Americans more enthusistically in resistance to aggression.

From the standpoint of the United States first priority must go to the continued flow of raw materials such as petroleum, tin, copper, manganese and the like as well as to the development of new sources of necessities such as rubber. The lapse of certain trade agreements at the moment makes new understandings essential. As a corollary, the United States will be interested in working with the Latin Americans to help them prevent the inflation which is sure to be encouraged by the combination of high raw material prices and restricted imports. Internal security—uniform measures to deal with Communist sabotage and subversion—will surely be on the agenda as will the question of other Latin contributions to the free world defense.

For their part the Latin Americans are certain to ask this country some embarrassing questions. Probably foremost in their minds will be the question whether, if they cooperate fully on raw materials, they may be cast off when the emergency is over; the sad experience of Brazil with respect to rubber development in World War II remains a sore point. Latin Americans are still bitter about the removal of price controls which had the effect of devaluing their dollar holdings before they could buy their deferred needs. Chile is likely to ask rather pointedly about the consistency of the copper import tax reimposed by Congress. And though the ill-natured Gillette coffee report seems to have been buried, it has left a lot of ruffled feelings which the United States will have to smooth.

Probably the most important step the United States can take is to work out a system of equality of sacrifice. This means the sort of export controls that will take into account the effect of shortages on national economies and will apportion available goods fairly. Moreover, the Latin Americans need to feel that their contributions are important, that they are being consulted, and that the United States is sharing essential information with them as partners. This implies that the Latins themselves must assume more responsibility in the defense of freedom. The strongest argument for unity is the fact that the freedom of Latin America is as inextricably bound up in the present struggle as is that of the United States.

Terror In Korea

No matter how this Korean campaign may turn out in the end, there is hardly much doubt about who the chief losers have been. They have been the Korean people, whose soil has been fought over twice, and now seems likely to be fought over a third time. They have watched their dams, their rice paddies, their cultivated fields, representing the patient peasant labor of generations, sacrificed to the exigencies of war. For a people that has always lived close to the border line of famine, it has been frightful experience. Even so, it is not the worst, for homes by the hundreds have been destroyed, families disrupted, children orphaned.

Yet it is the very nature of modern warfare that humble people, ignorant of politics, knowing little or nothing of the causes of strife, should be the chief victims. Even in eighteenth century Europe, before the rise of nationalism, when such concepts as "the nation in arms" and the levee en masse were unknown, when wars, though frequent, were fought by small professional armies according to prescribed rules, those who got into the path of conflict were likely to suffer, even though the distinction between combatant and noncombatant was sharply drawn.

Another important thing to remember is that for the Koreans this is a civil war. In all ages civil wars have been more terrible for the civilian population than wars against a foreign enemy. One of the concomitants of civil war is what we call, after the French Revolutionary example, "terror." This means the punishment visited by the party in possession upon real or suspected enemies within its lines. During the earlier phases of the campaign, when the allied armies were pushed down to a precarious foothold upon the tip of the peninsula, the Korean people suffered from the ruthless and well-organized Communist terror. Persons thought to be sympathetic to the government of Syngman Rhee, and those who possessed property, were dispossessed and murdered or driven into hiding. After the liberation of South Korea the survivors reemerged and were presently demanding vengeance for the sufferings they had endured and the friends and families they had lost. As in liberated Europe in 1944-45, a general hunt for "collaborators" and "fifth-columnists" began. And after the tide of battle in the North had been turned by the intervention of the Chinese Communists, the hunger for vengeance was stimulated by new fears and hysterias.

This explains the great counter-terror now raging in Southern Korea and especially in the vicinity of Seoul, in which, it is said, neither children nor the aged are being spared. Evidently, as in so many other civil wars, the principle of "blood guilt" is being applied. In less than five days more than 800 persons have been put to death by rifle and machine-gun fire. British and American soldiers, already well experienced in horror, are said to have been sickened at the sight of these mass executions, as well they may have been. Two American Catholic priests, Father Patrick O'Connor of this city, and Father George Carroll, a Maryknoll missioner, have been importuning the South Korean authorities to put an end to slaughter, apparently with no success.

No one who has read of the noyades at Nantes or the fusillades at Lyons, which occurred in what was then deemed the most civilized nation of Europe, can dismiss these South Korean horrors as merely another example of Oriental ferocity. But the South Korean terror has added a new and gruesome complication to an already difficult situation. The excutions have seriously compromised the moral position of the United Nations and have provided the Communists with a most valuable propaganda weapon; and therefore some means must be found of putting an end to them.

Eisenhower's Task

General Eisenhower's appointment as supreme commander of the North Atlantic military forces has been so long in coming that some of the psychological impact has worn off. In agreeing to the appointment at Brussels the United States has gambled that the naming of a supreme commander—before there are many troops to command—will galvanize the European allies into action. The need is to follow the appointment with precise military commitments and production schedules. Even General Eisenhower is no miracle worker. He should not be expected to plead with the individual governments to give shape to SHAPE. Although there are overtones of diplomacy in his job, his primary task is to command, not to wheedle.

Scarcely less important than the appointment of the supreme commander and agreement on German participation is the formation of a new Defense Production Board, which presumably will have an American chairman. This will have the vital function of bringing real division of labor in munitions: each country must produce what it can produce best. An example of what must come is Lord Tedder's suggestion that American factories produce British-type planes. Integrated production is the necessary corollary of a unified army, and it must come just as rapidly.

The magnitude of the military task may be seen from the fact that present available troops are little more than a token force. The United States and Britain each have two divisions in Germany and France has one; these will form the nucleus of General Eisenhower's command. France has promised three additional divisions immediately, and Britain is readying an armored division. Reportedly the United States plans to send three more divisions within a year. But these steps are a far cry from the publicly announced goal of 55 divisions by 1953.

Moreover, German participation is extremely uncertain. Although Germany has been allotted 150,000 men in the total international force, consisting of 25 combat teams, tactical air units and undisclosed sea elements, the Bonn government is still coy or dubious. Perhaps political readjustments with respect to Germany will facilitate an understanding. But there can be no thought of buying German participation. And until and unless the Germans indicate a willingness to come in, the plans must proceed without them.

It is important, too, that planners avoid a Maginot Line complex—that the forces be flexible enough to meet unorthodox enemy strategy, that they be prepared to cope with paratroop landings and extensive guerilla activity. Perhaps more essential than anything else is the generation of enthusiasm in Europe for self-defense. Unless the Europeans believe in the international force and work for it wholeheartedly, it is bound to fail. One encouraging sign is the fact that the agreement on the international force, including German units, was forthcoming in the face of Russian threats. This took courage which is the basis of self-defense.

At best, however, it is a gamble that an adequate defense can be built up before Russia moves. Speed is of the essence; nothing could be worse than to have token forces trapped. That is why there must be a definite timetable of performance—a timetable in which Congress, among others, will be interested. For unless plans are translated promptly into realities, then this country in its own interest must revise its strategy.

Merger Control At Last

For nearly a quarter of a century the Federal Trade Commission has been importuning Congress to close a loophole in the Clayton Act by prohibiting corporations from purchasing the assets of any other firm if the acquisition would substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. Under the law as it stands, the Federal Trade Commission is empowered to prevent stock purchases that restrain competition, but it cannot prevent mergers resulting from the outright purchase of physical assets. This week the Senate passed an Administration-endorsed bill plugging this loophole in the law. A companion bill was approved by the House more than a year ago, and the conference bill now awaits the President's signature.

The public may be surprised to hear that the Senate spent a good part of two days debating this loophole-closing amendment to the Clayton Act, despite the gravity of the crisis confronting the country. However, it is just as essential to establish safeguards against trade restraints and monopoly and to protect the independence of small business today as it was before we embarked on our mobilization program. Indeed, Senator Kefauver declared it is more important to stop the increase of monopolistic mergers during the mobilization period than at any other time. Big corporations producing raw materials for defense will be encouraged to expand production of finished goods and squeeze out or buy out independent manufacturers by channeling supplies to their own fabricating subsidiaries unless preventive legislation is enacted. The danger of this kind of encroachment is very real, and it is a strong argument for strengthening the antitrust laws, apart from the fact that the Clayton Act amendment furthers our long-range objective of preserving free competition.

This long overdue legislation will not interfere with defense production. The Defense Production Act exempts from the prohibitions of the antitrust laws and the Federal Trade Commission Act those voluntary agreements found by the President to be "in the public interest as contributing to the national defense." Furthermore, the legislation would not affect mergers already consummated. It applies only to corporations in interstate commerce; it prohibits only mergers that substantially lessen competition; it does not prevent the purchase of bankrupt companies or ban sales of assets by a small corporation to another small corporation. And it liberalizes existing restrictions on mergers effected by sales of stock. No wonder the bill passed both House and Senate by impressive majorities.

Rescued By Laryngitis

The same voice that enabled Senator Malone to defy the entire Congress in preventing passage of the antislot machine bill has now done him in. It is a fittingly ironic touch that the Nevada Senator's inability to resume his filibuster because of laryngitis enabled the Senate to approve the conference report by voice vote and clear the last obstacle to enactment of the bill. This is probably the first time a filibuster has ever been broken by literal speechlessness, and Chairman Johnson of the Interstate Commerce Committee is to be commended for his acute sense of timing in bringing up the bill. In any case Senator Malone has had a fairer break than given by most of the machines he has so tirelessly defended.

"Unhappy Happy"

The December 17 editorial "Unhappy Happy" lacks sense and meaning. It sounds like it was written by Fred Saigh or inspired by him. For years I have read with much profit the discussions on your editorial page. All of them have been backed by facts and good reasoning. If any good reasoning or common sense can be found in "Unhappy Happy" I am unable to discern it. Certainly no one who knows baseball or "Happy" wrote it.

Chandler is conceded by friend and foe alike as probably the finest Governor in Kentucky history. Behind that smile of Chandler's is a lifetime of clean living. Happy doesn't drink intoxicants, smoke or indulge in the telling of smutty stories. He lives a clean life and is the idol of millions of kids and grownups. When Happy talk to boys about the "good life," he knows what he is talking about, yet Chandler is as tough a man as you would want to tangle with in physical combat.

Last year Chandler came to your "Celebrities Tournament." He was not well at the time, but travelled from his home in Kentucky to help make your party a success. He even showed up for the second day of the tournament and played in the rain and the mud. Very few others showed on that day. Then he hurried back to his hotel to combat a touch of the "flu." He had a smile for everyone during the tournament.

Baseball belongs to the people. They want an honest man for commissioner who will not worry about offending anyone with a just decision. If you or anyone else has any facts that will show that Happy has not been fair, honest and true to the principles of good baseball, please state them. The fans will welcome these facts. What the fans resent is the news stories that "one club owner ordered the whisky bottles removed from the hotel suite of the club owners before Happy arrived" that he was then dismissed without any reason being given for the dismissal. If The Washington Post editorial department knows the reason for the dismissal will it let the public in on the facts?

Finally, The Post editorial writer writes off Happy completely by nominating Jim Farley and concluding that Happy has no chance. This in the face of reports that only one vote is needed to return Happy to power.

Planning Commission

It appears that the request of the National Park and Planning Commission for more power over the District area has been stymied for the present, and for my part I hope they don't get the authority. I hope that the various civic groups in the District will wake up to what the extension of greater power over the District by a Federal agency means if necessary.

The commission plans and acts upon the premise that the wish of the people of the city is secondary; that this is a Federal city, that it must be devolped on a long-range basis according to what will be best for the people of the country as a whole, as the commission sees it.

That this policy has cost the taxpayers of the District money, and is still costing them money, wthout their having an adequate return. The development of the Maryland and Virginia suburbs by a Federal agency will undoubtedly be of more benefit to those people than to people in the District; yet the District eventually has to pay part of the cost.

Its plans do not always have the sanction of the District Commissioners, who are responsible to the people here. The Fort Drive is characteristic of the grandiose plans of the commission—17 or 18 years going, and not started yet.

Its 30-year plan is a rehash of many projects proposed before. Some have merit, such as moving the Federal agencies out of leased buildings and the temporary buildings, and into a wider area. The development of East Capitol st. by building State and national buildings on it (removing existing buildings first, of course) may be feasible and it may not.

Let's have some discussion by D. C. citizens on the value of this body to the city.

Precision Prayer

Isn't there some way your newspaper could coordinate into one mighty group all those who are praying for our fighting men? Perhaps even miracles could happen—but at least, those gallant men of ours could face danger with even greater courage if the potential prayer force of the Washington area alone were harnessed. If their fate is on our minds night and day—even though we may at the moment have no husbands, sons or brothers in that danger zone—how much it would mean to our fellow Washingtonians concerned over their dear ones to know we were petitioning Almighty God in their behalf!

Couldn't an outstanding local clergyman—or a rotation of clergymen of the three major faiths—write a short daily prayer to be prayed at a certain hour, say 1 p. m., by all who wished to join in? Surely precision praying ought to have as much effect as precision bombing. VERNE CAUDLE.

Nationalist Help

I think your cartoon of December 14 is ill-timed and in bad taste, showing as it does Chiang Kai-shek carrying a placard stating "Chinese people are crazy about me" while on his back is the imprint of a huge foot, indicating that he was kicked out of China.

This is a strange interpretation to put on the heroic fight of Chiang's army against the hordes of Chinese Reds backed by Russia, the same Reds who are now murdering our boys in Korea. Are these fanatics who threw Chiang out supposed to be the Chinese people?

Our unwillingness to accept Chiang's offer of a half-million trained veterans in Formosa, which could mean the saving of thousands of American lives, is no credit to the policy-makers of the Administration, but fortunately press reports now indicate that a new and saner attitude is contemplated.

Drew Pearson should be highly commended for his courageous fight against communism and McCarthyism—twin evils of our times.

"Mr. Acheson's Troubles"

The usually responsible and provocative Mr. Walter Lippmann has, it seems to me, been considerably more provocative than responsible in his December 14 column on "Mr. Acheson's Troubles."

In the first place, I submit that Mr. Lippmann has done a disservice to some of his own basic tenets of foreign policy by writing off Mr. Acheson so cavalierly and giving advice to "the new Secretary of State" at the moment when Secretary Acheson is in flight to Brussels to speed the rearming of western Europe. The Secretary has given no indication of quitting his post and the President has many times reaffirmed his complete satisfaction with Mr. Acheson's performance during a period of unparalleled international crisis.

Dean Acheson has achieved the confidence of the free peoples of the world as have few of his predecessors and none of his detractors. The acceptance of his resignation would diminish American prestige and alienate our allies. It would weaken the United Nations just as surely as the replacement of Trygve Lie as Secretary General of the U. N., under Soviet pressure, would have done. It has been the over-all policies of Secretary Acheson which, during the past six months, have breathed life into that international body.

It is precisely because President Truman and Secretary Acheson have made great efforts to achieve unity that Mr. Lippmann "accepts" the Secretary's resignation and seeks to "repeal" the 1948 presidential election. His attack on "Mr. Truman, who is a professional politician, and Mr. Acheson, who is an amateur politician," is in effect an attack on the effort to build a bipartisan foreign policy.

Has not Mr. Lippmann been one of the stanchest advocates of bipartisanship in foreign affairs? Yet he now accuses the President and the Secretary of State of trying 'to play politics with a question of the highest national significance.' Does Mr. Lippmann suggest that foreign policy should be conducted without any regard for congressional realties? Is it his proposal that the opposition, no matter how powerful, should be totally disregarded? Does he contend that the Administration's efforts to unify the country should be abandoned in favor of a no-holds-barred internal fight which would inevitably endanger the elements of unity which now exist?

The accusation of playing politics seems well justified, but it is misplaced. It seems perfectly clear that a small but powerful group of intransigent and desperate Republicans has sought to make political capital of the peril in which the free world, including the United States, now finds itself. They have impugned the motives and the integrity of our national leaders. They have indulged in indiscriminate name-calling. They have sought to set impossible conditions on the passage of essential legislation to meet the crisis.

On at least one point I can agree with Mr. Lippmann, namely, that the efforts to "placate" the opposition have been something less than successful. Despite the naming of key Republican personalities to high office in the field of foreign affairs, despite all the legislative concessions dictated by political necessity, the opposition has not been stilled. Far from it. But in these circumstances it is indeed discouraging to find Walter Lippmann guilty of firing his effective shots at the wrong target.

Whether we are members of Congress or journalists, of whatever party or of no party, let us unite our efforts in support of our leadership now facing one of the most critical moments in our history. JAMES E. MURRAY,

Mental Shock Of Bad News

By Malvina Lindsay

The No's Have It

"IF I DIDN'T know the American people so well, I'd be frightened at some of the things I'm hearing," said Dr. Graph, the eminent cartographer of human behavior.

"If you ask me," said young Mr. Bright, "we're acting like 10-year-olds—that is, a lot of us. When anything adverse happens all we can shriek is 'Who's to blame?' I'm almost hating to talk to people, I hear so much griping, see so many long faces. This negatism is appalling. Do you suppose we caught it from Vishinsky?"

"We're having a little epidemic of emotional illness. We're not good losers. The shock was too great. We'll get hold of ourselves soon. It's just that a lot of our present 'sick' talk, especially that on Capitol Hill, makes us seem pretty childish before the world—and must make good reports for Communist agents."

"I'll say! I actually meet people who think we're about licked, that the Kremlin gang may actually take over here. Where's our guts?"

"They're probably people with a lot of 'priceless' old silver and brand-new television sets and motor cars. Higher living standards and advances in technology certainly make people more vulnerable to insecurity and fear."

"It's all so dumb though—constantly telling the world, including the Chinese and Russians, what fools and knaves our leaders are, how feeble our defenses are, how divided we are internally. And usually, as General Eisenhower has said, the criticism implies 'I am better informed than the person criticized.'"

"WELL THAT'S our system. Be patient. In another 150 years maybe we'll catch up on the responsibilities of free speech. But all that's not so dangerous as the talk that's mushrooming on malice, envy, suspicion, hate — emotions that poison and could destroy us. Such dangerous talk holds the biggest threat of dividing us from each other and from our Allies."

"If you ask me again," said Mr. Bright, "it has a very unhappy connection with the trial of Ilse Koch, the 'Red Witch of Buchenwald.' Remember how we used to wonder how the Nazis could possibly be so sadistic and inhuman? But now sometimes I hear people apply the dirty words of the day to those they don't like and the expression on their faces is such — well, I wouldn't want any one of them for my overseer in a concentration camp."

"But after all the first reaction of almost anyone, except the very rare mature human being, is when emotionally upset to take it out on someone else."

"Yes and that's why I'm uneasy about this anti-Semitic viciousness that showed up in the charges against Mrs. Rosenberg. You should have seen some of the literature attacking her! The type simply sizzled with hate. And there was the old Hitler technique — identifying Jews with communism."

"Of course. But remember that only a small percent of Americans are behaving the way we've been talking about. And they're the type that always makes the most noise. The people who're keeping their heads, who aren't griping or shrieking, aren't heard from. When a child has a tantrum, he's the one the neighbors hear."

"Just the same the noisy ones get a lot of followers—their formulas always seem so simple."

"I ADMIT their danger. And I remember that six months ago some leading authorities in this country on propaganda warned of the very behavior we're witnessing. They predicted that in a deepening political crisis, rabble rousers would use anti-foreignism, racial, religious, class and political hostility, to set Americans against each other, and that this, if unchecked, could transform American society.

"You think that'll happen?"

"No, I think this is a surface sickness."

"I still insist we haven't grown up.

"Who has? All humanity is adolescent—just trying to grow up. That's where I place my great hope in the American people. They can outdistance all the primitive hordes aligned against them in advancing toward maturity.

"But we're basically such an emotional people. We respond so impulsively to upset."

"Yes and we're hounds for self-improvement. I'll bet more people are trying to grow up, wanting to act adult here, than in any other country. What's more, we recognize that such a thing as a neurosis exists. That's more than the Kremlin does. And we are aware of mental and spiritual laws, wistfully eager to follow them, even though we don't often carry through. Unlike the Communists, we admit and are willing to face our own weaknesses. And for all our present negatism, we're basically a positive creative people. We'll soon cut out the delirious talk and get down to business."

"I only hope there won't be too many eavesdroppers in the meantime."

Lord's Prayer

Today and every day, at sunrise, midday and sunset, all nations could broadcast the following song clearly, as though its good singers really meant it:

"Our father . . . in heaven . . . Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth . . ." (King James Bible, Matt. 6:9, 10; Mal. 4:2).

Matter Of Fact

By Joseph And Stewart Alsop

Decline Of This Republic

ANYONE interested in finding out about the decay of American politics, should read the real story behind the Republican resolution demanding the dismissal of Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson. These reporters happen to believe that Acheson must be sacrificed, so that the country's Government can work again. But this by no means lessens the shock of the stories that have now seeped out of the House and Senate Republican conference chambers.

As to the House, what happened was about what you might expect. In the party steering committee, retiring Representative James Wadsworth, who sometimes seems to be the last American politician to care very much about national interests, was alone in warning that it was not helping to stab the Secretary of State in the back just before a major international conference. In the larger meeting of all the House Republicans, they took no vote. The anti-Acheson resolution was passed by a sort of unanimous howl, or yell, for blood.

The proceedings in the Senate, as might also be expected, were both more complex and vastly more meaningful. In brief, the Senate Republican steering committee, headed by Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, had prepared a resolution much milder than the violent condemnation of Acheson howled through in the House. But Senator Taft made no move to defend his handiwork when substitution of the House resolution was immediately proposed by Senator James P. Kem, of Missouri, whose foreign and defense voting record is virtually indistinguishable from the unlamented Vito Marcantonio's.

SENATOR TAFT instead reserved his opposition for another substitute offered by Senator Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts and a number of other Republican moderates. This resolution made no mention of Acheson by name. It called only for changes in Government to promote national unity. And it particularly emphasized restoration of bipartisanship and consultation between leaders of all parties in this time of dire national peril.

On this resolution, speaking of course within the Republican family, Senator Taft revealingly remarked that he disliked the whole idea of consultation. When the Republicans were consulted, he pointed out with perfect logic, they shared in the responsibility for what was subsequently done. But when they were not consulted, he continued, they could praise or blame the Administration, particularly blame, as the outcome might suggest was most advantageous. In short, in the view of Senator Taft, which found much favor with his colleagues, national unity was to be subordinated to the political interests of the Republican Party.

Without Taft to fight for it, the original steering committee draft resolution had few friends. The substitute of the moderates received only 15 votes in the conference. But a further issue was raised when Senator Homer Capehart of Indiana, another man with a foreign and defense voting record like Kem's, proposed a further amendment to the House resolution. The Capehart amendment demanded that Acheson's replacement as Secretary of State should be pure and unsullied by any contact with the development of American foreign policy in the last five years.

THIS was, of course, a naked attack on all responsible bipartisan-minded Republicans like Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, John Foster Dulles and Paul G. Hoffman. Senator William Knowland of California, one of the guilty men, pointed this out to Senator Capehart. Capehart replied simply that confession was good for the soul, and that the sooner the Republican Party got back to outright, all-out, unqualified isolationism, the better it would be.

Capehart was at least beaten, and a sweetening mention of national unity was at least added to the Senate resolution to please the moderates. In this form, the retirement of Acheson was ringingly demanded.

Among the Senators so voting, a large majority of course knew that their action would arouse the Missouri mule in President Truman, and make Acheson's retention more likely; these men indeed would be deeply disappointed if the President followed their advice and deprived them of their political target. A large majority among the Senators voting also realized that they were embarrassing national policy at the Brussels meeting. And finally, a substantial minority among the Senators voting, including the loudest bellowers about Acheson's "softness toward communism," possessed foreign and defense policy records almost indistinguishable from the editorial lines of the Daily Worker.

FBI As A Cure-All

By Marquis Childs

Unwanted Jobs Handicap Security

ONE OF the agencies most heavily burdened by the present crisis is the Federal Bureau of Investigation. To the harassed men who run the FBI it sometimes seems that they are called upon to investigate everybody and everything.

Childs

New loyalty laws, such as the law requiring that all science students receiving Federal aid be investigated regardless of whether their work is secret or nonsecret, constantly pile up the work. Most disturbing is the growing tendency to try to push on to the FBI responsibility for local law enforcement.

The Department of Justice is under pressure from some members of Congress to make a drastic change in procedure. A memorandum to Attorney General J. Howard McGrath signed by several members of the House recommends that United States district attorneys be permitted to call on the FBI for assistance when local law enforcement officers are unable to cope with a local crime situation.

While the district attorney's request would have to be approved by the Attorney General, this would be no real safeguard. Inevitably there would be political pressure behind the local United States attorney's request and it would be impossible to say no.

The tendency would be to pass the buck to the FBI. It would be the perfect out for the mayor where city law enforcement had broken down. If the FBI failed in a cleanup, the mayor and his police force would feel they were absolved for their failure. And the graft and corruption, which are so often at the bottom of the failure to enforce local laws, could go merrily on.

J. EDGAR HOOVER is strongly opposed to such a change, which would require a congressional amendment to the law that now governs the operations of the FBI. Attorney General McGrath is also opposed to the change. He points out that it would make the FBI a national police force reaching into every corner of American life. This is what critics of the FBI accuse the agency of seeking to become.

Curiously enough those inclined to talk most loudly about statism and big government are ready and even eager to put new burdens on the FBI. They do not seem to realize that this is a confession of the breakdown of local authority and responsibility. It is an admission that a centralized government with a Federal police force is essential to maintain ordinary order and decency.

At present the FBI functions only in connection with violations of Federal law and on recommendation of the Attorney General. Even with this limitation the scope of the job has increased amazingly in recent years. Hoover's critics have sometimes represented him as reaching out for these added powers.

Actually in most instances the contrary is true. As the work load is piled on the FBI, it becomes more difficult to focus on the vital task—to maintain the internal security of the United States.

Today this is a formidable responsibility. Internal sabotage in the event of war is one of the main objectives of communism. In 1940 when Russia and Nazi Germany were united in a friendship pact, Communists actively sabotaged plane production in American plants because the planes were intended for the defense of Britain and France. The FBI must today be unceasingly alert to avert the kind of Pearl Harbor which would consist of the sabotage of vital defense plants and transportation centers.

THIS must be done within the framework of the civil rights guaranteed in the Bill of Rights. In recent years it has seemed to me that Hoover and the FBI have tried to stay strictly within that framework. There has been criticism in some cases such as was noted by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the arrest of Judith Coplon and the Russian agent to whom she is charged with giving secret documents. And there is the unhappy business of wire tapping which must seem to most Americans an invasion of privacy with overtones of the police state.

But repeatedly Hoover has made it clear that he does not want the kind of extracurricular powers Congress has from time to time tried to saddle him with. Thus he firmly rejected the insistent demand that the FBI make a final evaluation of the loyalty of individuals investigated. As Hoover pointed out, that would be a wholly improper function for an investigative agency no matter what its qualifications or record.

This, it seems to me, is the best answer to critics such as Max Lowenthal whose recently published book, The Federal Bureau of Investigation, is a compendium of the charges made against the FBI since its founding. The Communist Daily Worker hailed the Lowenthal book as proof of "an American gestapo."

No institution in America is above criticism and most of our institutions of Government come in for a lot of unfair criticism. But so long as the FBI maintains the record it has, there need be no fear of criticism. The place it has built for itself may be almost too high as witness the efforts to bring it in as the magic cure-all for every local crime situation.

other former vice chairman of the War Production Board, will keep his present post as head of the Economic Cooperation Administration mission in London.]

The Atlantic Pact Council invited President Truman last night to appoint General Eisenhower. The President announced the appointment today, likening the position to that which Gen. Douglas MacArthur holds in the Far East.

The President also announced that additional American troops will be sent to Europe as soon as possible to join the Eisenhower command. He did not say how many or how soon, but the expectation here was that at least five full United States divisions will be in Europe within a year.

Eisenhower will come to Europe around January 1 to take command of what now is largely a paper army—the equivalent of about 10 divisions in Germany and Austria. Allied intelligence sources said recently these divisions were faced by 33 Soviet divisions, totaling about 320,000 men, in East Germany.

The 69-year-old five-star general who directed the United Nations victory in 1945 from SHAEF (Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force), will create another international staff at SHAPE (Supreme Headquarters, Allied Powers in Europe).

Monty May Be Deputy

His new headquarters may be at Versailles, 10 miles southeast of Paris, where the peace treaty of World War I was written and where he had his headquarters in the later phases of World War II.

In St. Louis, Eisenhower announced his chief of staff will be Lieut. Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, United States Army deputy for plans and operations.

British Field Marshal Lord Montgomery, who heads a supreme headquarters of the Brussels Pact powers (Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg) at Fontainebleau, southwest of Paris, may move in as a deputy in the supreme Atlantic command. A high French officer probably will be another deputy.

The Foreign Ministers, who reached their final decisions at a two-day secret session with Defense Ministers, did not disclose their detailed plans for rearming the Germans, five years after Germany was disarmed.

They left to the United States, British and French Foreign Ministers the task of wooing the reluctant Germans to the task of taking arms again.

Reports from Bonn, capital of the West German Republic, indicated this would not be an easy task. The Germans saw a golden opportunity to shed their status of a defeated, occupied nation and gain the position of a full-fledged ally in hard bargaining.

Also, as one diplomat said, "The Germans don't like the idea of being caught with a gun in their hands, if the Russians move against them before we are prepared."

East German Communists already have enacted a law threatening the headman's ax for any German collaborating in Western defense plans.

Western sources said the occupation statute for West Germany will be modified, but not abrogated, in the bargaining for German manpower.

The Allied high commissioners tentatively scheduled a meeting with West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer for Thursday.

The plan they will offer, it was reported, is the raising of about 150,000 German soldiers in combat teams of 5000 to 6000 men each. The Germans would be allowed no general staff and no war ministry.

The Germans have objected that they would not have full equality under that plan.

Eisenhower Selection Hailed

But the Allies were reported ready to let them raise a tactical air force of fighting planes and some bombers.

The selection of Eisenhower was hailed throughout western Europe.

French diplomatic sources in Paris said his designation would give a great impetus to unity. "He is known not only as a great general but as a good diplomat as well," one said.

Official Netherlands sources said it was fortunate so "distinguished and extremely capable a person" was available.

An official spokesman at Bonn pointed out that Adenauer profously had said he would welcome the appointment of the American commander.

Red Reaction Awaited Here

000 men for western Germany, and they announced that any attack from the East would be regarded as an attack on themselves.

U. S. Urged German Units

At the same meeting in New York, Secretary Acheson first proposed using German units in a combined international army, but he failed to get French approval at that time.

Still no answer came from the Russians to the Allied protest of last May about the warlike preparations in eastern Germany. Finally, on Oct. 18, Moscow sent a warning shot across the Westerners' bows.

Identical notes to Washington, London and Paris brushed aside the Western protest, insisted that the units formed in the East were nothing but police, and accused the Western Allies in turn of arming and training military units in Western Germany.

The Soviet notes concluded with a warning that Moscow would not tolerate a revival of a "German regular army in West Germany," and would "not acquiesce" in the course the Western Powers were following.

The West went ahead with its plans to include Germans in the combined army, although, to meet French objections, the United States and Britain agreed to formations of smaller than division size.

Last Saturday, two days before the Brussels meeting was to begin, the Russians delivered another warning, this time in the form of notes to the British and French governments.

A revival of German armed forces, the notes said, would be "a serious threat to the peace," something the Soviet Union "cannot accept," and would violate the wartime treaties between Britain and France and the Soviet Union.

The question in Washington yesterday was what the Russians would do about such a "threat." One possibility, already discussed in Europe, was that the Russians would denounce their wartime treaties, but these long ago lost whatever validity they had.

Allies Unterrified

Clearly the twelve allies in Brussels were unterrified by the Soviet threats, or, if they felt any qualms, they did not give in to them. The Europeans knew that unless they accepted the principle of using German units they probably would not get American troops for an international army, and they would not get what they wanted most—the quick appointment of Eisenhower as commander.

Perhaps because of the Soviet warnings, the final communique from Brussels was guarded in its reference to German units. It said that the 12-nation North Atlantic Council "reached unanimous agreement regarding the part which Germany might assume in the common defense."

"German participation would strengthen the defense of Europe without altering in any way the purely defensive character of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization," the 12 nations added.

"The Council invited the governments of France, the United Kingdom and the United States to explore this matter with the government of the German Federal Republic.

Sole Purpose to Keep Peace

"The decisions taken and the measures contemplated have the sole purpose of maintaining and consolidating peace. The North Atlantic nations are determined to pursue this policy until peace is secure."

It will be the task of western diplomacy to prove these points to the suspicious and angry Russians—if there is time.

In any event, it will be a long time before any Germans can be recruited and trained for the Eisenhower army. The German people themselves have shown not the slightest enthusiasm for it; the West German government has denounced the proposed plans for using German unit as "inequality," and the allies would go ahead with their own combined defense without awaiting German assent.

Gruenther Experienced In European Command

Lieut. Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, 51, will be taking over a post whose duties he knows well when he becomes General Eisenhower's chief of staff in the new European defense command.

One of the Army's most brilliant strategists and tacticians, Gruenther served as deputy chief of staff to the Third Army in World War II when it was headed by Eisenhower and later as General Ike's deputy chief of staff at Supreme Allied Headquarters.

After VE-Day, Gruenther was deputy commanding general of United States Forces in Austria for six months, then served as deputy commandant of the Army War College, director for the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans and Operations.

D. C. Air Guard Called Up

D. C. Air Guard is close to 1000 officers and men.

Two other fighter squadrons of the 113th Fighter Wing and Fighter Groups—located at Richmond and Baltimore—were not included in yesterday's call-up, Air Force spokesmen said. They still are equipped with old, piston-engined F-47 fighters.

Millikan's War Record

Millikan an export representative of Goodyear Rubber, was credited with shooting down 15 enemy plane during World War II. He first served with the RCAF and the Eagle Squadron in England, later switching to the USAF, and was shot down and spent a year in prison camp.

Neither District Guard nor Andrews officials knew yesterday what would be done about housing for the officers and airmen when they report. Conferences on the problem are expected this morning. The Maryland base is very short on quarters and many families live in a "trailer city."

Briggs Forced to Return To Prague by Train

PRAGUE, Dec. 19 (AP).—United States Ambassador Ellis O. Briggs returned to Prague by train tonight because Czech authorities would not let him fly in.

He came from Frankfurt, Germany, on the last leg of his trip from Washington where he has been consulting with the State Department. The Ministry of National Defense gave no reason for refusing to permit the Ambassador to fly in from Paris in a United States plane, American officials said.

OF BOOKS AND BRENTANO'S

If you're getting into that last-minute shopping frenzy which becomes so unbearably popular about this time every year, perhaps a final once over lightly list of books from Brentano's will ease the last-minute dashing . . . If they like to laugh, give them Charles Addams' "MONSTER RALLY," Cornelia Otis Skinner's "NUTS IN MAY," or, if they prefer a more sophisticated snicker, Will Cuppy's inimitable "THE DECLINE AND FALL OF PRACTICALLY EVERYBODY." If they like to ponder, give them Winston Churchill's epic "THE HINGE OF FATE," Dr. Will Durant's continuation of The Story of Civilization, "THE AGE OF FAITH," or Arnold Toynbee's incisive comments on "WAR AND CIVILIZATION" . . . If they like to sing, give them "THE FAMILY BOOK OF FAVORITE HYMNS," "THE TRAPP FAMILY BOOK OF CHRISTMAS SONGS," or "THE YALE CAROL BOOK." If they like to travel, give them exciting "KON-TIKI," or Eleanor Early's lighthearted "NEW YORK HOLIDAY," or perhaps best of all, the new "RAND McNALLY WORLD ATLAS" . . . If they like to cook (or eat—and who doesn't?) give them "THE PERFECT HOSTESS COOKBOOK," "CHAFING DISH COOKERY" or the intriguingly different cookbook for men, "WOLF IN CHEF'S CLOTHING" . . . If they like to browse, give them "THE MAUGHAM READER" or "A PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN THEATRE." Or, for really serious browsers, "THE OXFORD BOOK OF AMERICAN VERSE" . . . If they like to run and shout and climb trees and only occasionally sit down with a book, give them the best children's books you possibly can. Give them fine new books like "SONG OF THE SEASONS" and "THE ANIMALS' MERRY CHRISTMAS," or great old classics like "WINNIE-THE-POOH," "TREASURE ISLAND," and "TOM SAWYER" . . . Above all, give them a Merry Christmas.

A. U. Gives Hoyas Stiff Fight Before Losing, 65-62

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

FOR THE American League's pitchers, there was never a happier retirement than the one announced by the Yankees the other day. Tommy Henrich, they said, hereafter would be on a non-playing status as a Yankee coach. That will suit everybody just fine—everybody who had to pitch against Henrich, that is.

It won't suit Yankee fans, though. Even in the mass adulation of Joe DiMaggio, a considerable corner of their hearts was reserved for Tommy Henrich, whose batting average they always refused to believe against the weight of his feats in the clutch.

POVICH

And it is something of a shocker to recapitulate and discover that in only two of his 10 seasons with the Yankees did Henrich ever hit better than .300. The lifetime average he compiled in the majors was a modest .282, but as Bucky Harris says, "He's the greatest .282 hitter who ever walked up there with a bat."

Don Newcombe of the Dodgers may have been surprised that opening day of the 1949 World Series when Henrich walked up there in the ninth and beat him out of a 1-0 ball game with a home run. Yankee fans weren't. They were pleased, but not surprised.

HENRICH wasn't one of the American League's top home run hitters, yet he could respond to a situation with any of them. It is no coincidence that in 1949 the man who hit the most home runs with the bases loaded was Henrich. The bigger the challenge, the better Henrich liked it.

Naturally, Henrich knew he was a pretty good hitter despite the modesty of his average. And so did the pitchers in both leagues. Thus it was surprising, a couple of years back that Henrich took a third strike from the Braves' Warren Spahn, with two on and two out in an All-Star game. Most surprised of all was Henrich, but he could force a smile later in the day in saying:

"I didn't think he'd dare to curve me with the count three-and-two. He pitched to me like he never heard of me, I guess."

Hugh Casey of the Dodgers had heard of Henrich though. And back in the World Series of 1941, it was Casey's desire to put everything on the ball in pitching to Henrich that resulted in the famous wild pitch-passed ball charged to Catcher Mickey Owen, and opened the floodgates for four winning Yankee runs in the ninth.

WHEN THE Yankees asked Henrich to move in from right field and take over the first base job three seasons back, they weren't gambling on the hope that he could make the transition. The league's best right fielder instantly demonstrated that he was one of the league's finest first basemen.

Henrich's versatility was no accident. He became an accomplished first baseman without any purpose of making a career of it. Yankee coaches in spring training had a time chasing Henrich out of the infield. He didn't want to be a first baseman but he did insist on learning to play ground balls because "those things that come bouncing out to me in right field look easy after handling those hot ones in the infield."

Tommy missed no tricks of his trade. He wasn't content to stay in the outfield catching fungoes in pre-game drills. When the other outfielders were up there taking their batting turn or lolling about, Henrich was in the outfield catching balls hit off batting-practice pitching. By then an established star, he gave the impression he was trying to make the team, but he had his own reason, to wit: "Anybody can catch a fungo hit. There's no substitute for catching the kind you see in a game."

THUS IT WAS one day, when a young Yankee outfielder, worshipping at the feet of Henrich, told him "It must be great to be able to do all the things you can." Tommy was able to answer:

"A lot of sweat goes into it, too."

He wasn't sweating that day in Chicago just before the All-Star game in '47, but he was thinking a bit about it. Henrich was in the A.L. starting outfield. He figured to get into the game, only as a pinch-hitter, at best. But for 20 minutes there he was in right field, throwing bounding balls off the wall to study the rebound in a strange park in case he did have to play right field.

The knee injury that hastened his retirement, kept him out of the 1950 World Series. To the last, he tried to minimize it, saying "it doesn't exactly pain me, but it sure feels good when I stop running." Only an enthusiasm for playing the game could produce that delightful sort of contradiction.

W & L Proves Easy For Colonials, 70-52

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Georgetown's Hoyas ran into stiff opposition from American University last night but defeated the Eagles, 65-62, in the feature game of the first Uline Arena college doubleheader of the season before 3219 spectators. In in the first game, George Washington had it easy, winning over Washington and Lee, 70-52.

Gene Witkin's 24 Points Pace GW

The Generals trailed by only 43-39 and were threatening. Sophs Tex Silverman and Bob Edenbaum sank baskets to enable the Colonials to breathe easier.

With Bill Scott, a clever dribbler, accounting for most of the points, W. & L. climbed within 6 points, 55-49. Again Silverman and Edenbaum pulled GW together and, at the end, the victors were coasting.

Little Gene Witkin, who scored 14 points before intermission, scored the last two baskets of the game to up his game total to a respectable 24.

W. & L., beaten by Maryland 53-42, Monday night, was off to a horrible start, GW waltzing to a 25-7 lead.

The Generals' Jay Handlan made only 14 points as W. & L. lost its fifth in seven starts. Handlan's the boy who scored more than 25 points against Wake Forest and Duke and dropped in 28 against the Terps.

Eagles Lead At Half, 37-33

Georgetown squeezed by inspired American University, 65-62, last night at Uline Arena. And it took a near-miraculous performance by brilliant Barry Sullivan to save the Hoyas from defeat at the hands of the 13-point underdog Eagles.

Sullivan went on a nine-point rampage to put Georgetown in front for the first time 13 minutes before the end of the game and broke American's back. He wound up with a 25-point total.

Sullivan, slender 6-foot soph, brought Georgetown from a three-point deficit to a 53-49 lead with his nine-point burst.

When he finally missed a shot, Bill Bolger was on hand to tap it in. A moment later, Bolger missed a foul and Sullivan did the tapping to up the Hovas lead to 61-55. He followed with a set shot and Georgetown led by eight points with less than four minutes left.

Webster Finds the Basket

Sherwood Webster, American's great one-hand shot, scored six of the Eagles' first eight points after intermission and AU was in front, 45-39.

Webster was shooting desperately—and effectively—at the end, too. A field goal and a foul by him cut Georgetown's lead to 65-60 in the last minute.

Another hook shot by Webster was the final goal by either team with the game degenerating into a series of foul calls on A. U. Webster took runnerup scoring honors with 19 points.

Sharing the bows with Sullivan for Georgetown was 6-foot-7 Hugh Beins. He dropped in three set shots to help the Hoya comeback.

When Needed Most

Beins made all three shots after taking passes on the foul line with his back to the basket. He whirled and dropped them at times Georgetown needed them most.

Staff Cassell's American University boys were red-hot from the beginning. They'd have had their upset, too, if Sullivan hadn't gotten equally hot.

With a dazzling shooting display, A. U. was in command throughout the first half. And it was threatening to break up the game at any time.

Terps Apply 'Freeze,' Beat Rutgers, 51-45

With the temperature hovering around 10 degrees outside, Maryland's basketball team applied the "freeze" in Ritchie Coliseum and defeated Rutgers, 51-45, at College Park last night.

Leading 48-43 with two minutes remaining, the Terps refused eight foul shots and took the ball out of bounds to maintain control for their fourth straight victory and fifth in six college starts.

Captain Lee Brawley, who paced the home team with 19 points, sparked a Maryland offensive spurt midway through the second half which clinched the win.

Rutgers trailed by only 38-40 with ten minutes left, Brawley, who had tallied 106 points in six contests then hit a hot streak. The rangy forward dropped in four points to up Maryland's lead to 44-38. He also added three important points in the closing seconds.

The Terps led throughout the second half after an eight-point streak in the opening five minutes gave them a 37-27 advantage.

Rutgers bounced right back under the leadership of Hal Corizzi and Adolph Schlesinger, who paced the Scarlet with 15 and 7 points, respectively. They slowly closed the gap. When they came to within two points, Brawley took over and the Terps pulled away.

Maryland had one of its poorer nights at the foul line, making 15 of 27 shots, but Rutgers was even worse, converting only 11 in 25 tries.

Maryland's freshmen team kept pace with the varsity in a preliminary game by defeating George Washington's frosh, 54-47, for their fourth triumph in five games. Gene Shue and Ed Cahill paced the attack with 16 and 14 points, respectively to hand G. W. its first loss in four starts.

Bo McMillin Quits As Coach of Detroit

DETROIT, Dec. 19 (AP).—Alvin N. "Bo" McMillin, head coach and general manager of the Detroit Lions of the National Football League, resigned today.

His sudd nedecision to quit the NFL club came after the Lions board of directors had held three meetings at which his status was discussed.

"Bo" in a three-page announcement paid tribute "to a number of directors and stockholders who supported me and have been for the Lions, win, lose or draw, and who worked—not talked—a good game."

McMillin added that his own situation with the Lions reminded him of a joke told about Col. Charles Lindbergh's nonstop flight to France. The essence of the story was that Lindbergh's success was due to the fact that he flew alone, without a board of directors to tell him what to do.

"I think that story is quite apropos," said Bo.

". . . I feel that is for the best interest of pro football in Detroit to resign from my post as general manager and head coach. . . . I do not have to apologize for the job I have done for the Detroit Football Company.

"It has been said, and printed, that some of my players did not like or respect me. I want you football fans to know that while coaching the Detroit Lions I was not conducting a popularity contest. There might have been others who were doing just that, but not me.

"I had to say no. I had to mete out discipline. Therefore I am not surprised that some gossip mongers would pick up from a few malcontents that I was unpopular."

When he came to the Lions in 1948, he emphasized that it would take several years to rebuild the Detroit club which had become the doormat of the NFL. This season he got such rookie stars as Leon Hart, Doak Walker and Thurman McGraw, but some of his directors became impatient with the team's failure to turn in a more impressive record.

The 55-year-old coach gave no indication as to his future plans.

McMillin, No. 1 man in the Lions' organization since he resigned the head coaching job at Indiana University, still had two years to go on his five-year contract with the Lions.

Edwin J. Anderson, president of the football club, said an "amicable settlement" has been reached on McMillin's contract, which called for $30,000 a season.

Catholic Loses To St. Joseph's In 56-52 Duel

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 19.—St. Joseph's College erased a four-point lead held by Catholic University in the final four minutes of the game and went on to win, 56-52, before 1500 fans at the St. Joseph's Alumni fieldhouse.

St. Joseph's led, 19-14, at the end of the first quarter and 34-22 ata half time. Catholic University then staged a dramatic rally that completely bewildered the Hawks and pushed the Cardinals into a 42-42 tie at the three-quarter mark. Later Catholic took a 50-46 lead.

Sophomore Mike Fallon contributed five points to lead a 10-point St. Joseph scoring spree in the final four minutes.

Cards' Hardy Can Pick 'Em

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 19 (AP). Jim Hardy, formerly of the Los Angeles Rams and now quarterbacking for the Chicago Cardinals, is gaining a reputation as a clairvoyant.

Earlier this year, Hardy predicted his Cardinals would beat the Philadelphia Eagles. It happened.

Then the curly-topped signal caller said his team would knock off the Chicago Bears. That also happened.

And last Friday, Hardy forecast publicly that the Rams would beat the Bears for the NFL's National Conference title. Once again, jackpot.

Yesterday, handsome Jim grabbed himself another fistful of tree. He picked the Rams over the Cleveland Browns in the National Football League championship battle at Cleveland Sunday.

"I know you'll hate me, Joe," Hardy told Ram Coach Joe Stydahar at the Southern California football writers meeting, "But I think you're going to win the ball game."

Bob Margarita On Brown's List

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 19 (AP).—Gregory (Gus) Zitrides resigned today as football coach at Brown University, and among those mentioned as possible successor was Georgetown's Bob Margarita.

Margarita was a star halfback at Brown in 1941 and '42, and is one of the few Ivy Leaguers to make the grade in pro football, playing with the Chicago Bears. Later he was a backfield coach at Harvard, Brown, Georgetown and Yale before becoming head coach at 28 for the Hoyas in 1949.

Caps vs. Royals at Uline

Ed Mikan Gets Chance Tonight to Show Up Risen, Who Cost Him Job at Rochester

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

ED MIKAN, not to be confused with his famous brother, George, draws a welcome assignment for the Washington Caps, tonight, 8:30, at Uline Arena.

He is to guard Arnia Risen, a 6-foot, 9-inch Rochester center, who did him out of a regular job with the Royals and finally was responsible for Ed's being sold to Washington three weeks ago.

This is Ed's first chance to prove that Royals' Coach Lester Harrison made a mistake by benching Ed in favor of Risen, and then peddling him off.

Any help Mikan can offer will be appreciated by Bones McKinney and the Caps. They've been beaten 11 straight times by the Royals since 1948.

ON THE NIGHT that Mikan was sold to Washington, the Caps thought they had ended the Royals' mastery. With three seconds left, the Caps led, 71-68. But somehow, Arne Johnson and Jack Coleman put in rapid fire baskets to win for Rochester, 72-71.

Given the chance to play regularly here, Mikan has done quite well, averaging 11.3 points for six games, playing the back boards and holding down the opponents' top scorers.

This Monday, he gets the supreme guarding assignment, against brother George in Minneapolis.

He has had that job before, and despite his familiarity with George, he has found him just as difficult to stop as any other guard.

"I did get lucky in an exhibition game this fall," smiles Ed. "I held him to eight points and got 12 myself. You have to be lucky as well as good to stop George for he has every shot in the book."

At 6 feet 8 inches, Ed is 2 inches shorter than George, and he's the third Mikan brother to play pro basketball. The eldest, Joe, 6 feet 4 inches, played a couple of seasons with the Lakers.

Mikan's 617 Points Top NBA Scorers

NEW YORK, Dec. 19 (AP).—Minneapolis' Magnificent center, George Mikan, scored 125 points last week to increase his National Basketball Association scoring lead over Alex Groza of Indianapolis.

Mikan now has 617 points in 22 games, compared to Groza's 24-game output of 501 points.

Should Help Grid Recruiting

Navy Drops Physics and Trig From Entrance Requirements

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Dec. 19 (AP).—The Naval Academy announced today the elimination of plane trigonometry and elementary physics from its entrance requirements.

The step brings Annapolis into line with West Point, and it was welcomed by Navy football officials.

"It's bound to help us," said an Athletic Department spokesman.

West Point dropped the two subjects from its entrance qualifications several years ago, he added.

Secretary of the Navy Matthews approved the move today, the Academy announced. It had been recommended by a committee of Academy officers.

"This reduction in mandatory pre-entrance studies brings the educational requirements for entrance to the Naval Academy more in consonance with what is normally available in typical secondary school level," the Academy announcement said.

Both plane trigonometry and elementary physics will be added to the curriculum next fall, so all Midshipmen will be grounded in the subjects.

Athletic officails long have complained they were at a disadvantage with West Point and civilian universities in attracting athletes.

"This is bound to help us football-wise," the spokesman said. "We would lose boy after boy after boy. So many kids don't have a chance to take trig and physics.

"They'd tell us their high schools didn't offer the subjects and they'd go to some other college."

Aura Lee Acts Up, But Tires at End

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., Dec. 19.—A. C. Randolph's Tellanrun, whose sire Runantell died last year at the age of 30, was up in the last jump to take a nose-photo finish decision in the Georgetown Purse, featuring the Tuesday program.

The Virginia-bred 4-year-old made it two victories in a row at the meeting by taking into camp C. E. George's Baby Song. Close up in the blanket ending was W. L. Curles' Young Scamp.

Saddled by Norman Haymaker and ridden by young Darrell Hartley, Tellanrun was second choice in the betting and paid $7.80 after going the about six furlongs in 1:16 over a fast track and under cloudless skies.

Justin Funkhouser's Aura Lee, the favorite, entertained the crowd by tossing Willie Downs before the break and galloping off to a point around the clubhouse turn where she playfully eluded an outrider.

However, her conduct in the race was not amusing to those who backed her chances. The big game filly went to the front at once, set a good pace but tired badly when challenged by Baby Song at the far turn. Baby Song, a breeding product of two popular campaigners here—Boston Man and Highland Song opened a good lead, under Johnny Regalbuto's urging.

However, Hartley roused Tellanrun and the brown colt came to the outside to gradually wear down the chestnut filly. The photo was a tight affair. With better racing luck, Young Scamp probably would have made it three noses on the wire.

Double Pays $16.80

The daily double on the 9-3 combination of C. B. Carter's Petrolnel ($3.40) and J. K. Wynkoop's Gomel ($11.40) paid $16.80 but the program was not without its longshot innings.

J. Scoviteh's Salient won the third race under a good ride by C. Martinez to return a $32.20 mutuel while Bennie Cruickshank's See D. with Vernon Bush up, took the fifth at $23.60.

The day's longest price came in the eighth race when E. E. Henderson's Bev's Boy got home in front at $61.20. The 3-year-old, however, had to survive a foul claim by Anthony Russo who rode H. E. Ortel's Megocycle into second position. Vince Bracciale, third with R. F. Duffy's Rustum also was called by the stewards.

Bev's Boy came up on the outside, swerved momentarily and went on to win by a length and a half. Megocycle appeared to bear in and had Rustum in tight quarters along the inside rail.

Bill Bennings

Dear Folks: At Charles Town Apprentice Darrell Hartley's departure for Florida was delayed by Owner-Trainer Dave Robertson who holds his contract. Bennie Cruickshank, former jockey star, is doing well as an owner-trainer. He saddled His Seed, to win the fifth race at $23.60. New Jersey tracks have asked for dates substantially the same as last year. Bowie or Laurel will open the Maryland campaign on March 26 after Charles Town gets in a meeting starting March 3d. The spring set-up is such that Havre De Grace can get in a continuous 25-day session with only a two-day conflict with Garden State, before Pimlico gets under way. Garden State will have a two-day conflict with Delaware Park. While on the subject of dates, A. J. Boyle has asked for spring and fall meetings at the New Waterford Park oval, 40 miles from Pittsburgh. See you on the rail.—BILL.

Still Bad—For Ducks

Waterfowl Hunters in Area Get Results in Good Weather

By Ralph Murdock

YOU CAN COUNT the "bluebird days" on your thumbs since the open duck season started in this area on November 27.

Murdock

The waterfowl hunters have been blessed with better-than-usual weather and most of the nimrods who had access to a duck blind have enjoyed good shooting. So far blackheads have furnished the bulk of the sport.

The Susquehanna Flats at the present are well populated with canvasbacks and the waters in this spot are still open.

However, a couple more days of 20-degree temperatures could alter this situation and the best decoyers in the duck family would be forced to look for other feeding grounds. If history repeats itself, the next hopping-off spots would be the Potomac River and the Chesapeake Bay.

On Monday Earl Midwick and Jack Hudgins of the Public Housing Administration were hunting off Franklin Manor on the west side of the bay. At 2 o'clock the pair had killed seven ducks and only needed one more to get their limits.

IN A JIFFY a lone blackhead headed for the decoys. Two guns barked in unison and the eighth duck was sprawled out on the water in front of the blind—seemingly dead.

The hunters proceeded to gather up their equipment and leave the blind. As they picked up their decoys, the "No. 8" duck decided to make a getaway. The web-foot dived below the surface and disappeared from sight—that's the last the hunters ever saw of him.

The final score was six blackheads and one golden-eyed whistler.

George Darnell, retired lieutenant of detectives in the District has just returned from Florida. Darnell made the trip down through the inland waterway on the Smoky Joe and reports good fishing in Indian River.

The journey was uneventful except for a snowstorm at Moorhead City, N. C. It took 14 days to cover the distance from Washington to Palm Beach, Florida.

The World's Greatest Christmas Stories

A Christmas Story

This story is part of a two-week series of selections from "The World's Greatest Christmas Stories," a new anthology edited by Eric Posselt and just published by Prentice-Hall.

Today's story is by Feodor Dostoevsky (1821-1881), Russian journalist who became one of the world's great novelists. He wrote such classics as "Crime and Punishment" and "The Brothers Karamazov."

By Feodor Dostoevsky

IT WAS Christmas Day, the second Christmas after I had been brought to the Dead House. The convicts had been granted a holiday in honor of the occasion, and dispensed from work, which after all is not such a great favor, because it is better to work than to think, and what can one do but think when one's hands are not busy, and what can be more dreadful than thinking, when this means the remembrance of other times and other days, and what tormentor has ever been able to evade the agony of thought, when it presses with all its dead weight upon a human creature?

On that Christmas Day, the prison was very still and quiet, while its inmates were whispering to each other in hushed tones, as if afraid to break this silence and this calm otherwise than by the noise of their chains which clinked whenever they made a movement—these chains which were there to remind the poor wretches who wore them that their misery was still going on, and would go on . . . for how long . . . none could tell or remember. But for some, this was certain, until death came to release them from the burden of their doomed existences.

The prisoners had as usual received gifts from kind people in the town who had wanted them to share some of their own Christmas gladness, and they had been taken to church and given a better dinner than on other days. And after this meal had been partaken of, there remained nothing more for them to do but come together to cheer each other as well as they could in the big hall which served them when not out of doors, as a sleeping place and spot of reunion.

Save for the flickering of a lantern left by one of the guards next to the door leading into the yard, darkness had fallen upon them, a weird unearthly kind of darkness which reminded one of all the evil thoughts kept hidden in the souls of all these men, so many among whom were criminals but in name.

THE CONVICTS, free for a few moments from the perpetual watch kept over their movements, were lying or sitting on the large wooden platform on which they slept at night; and while one of them was playing softly on a violin, half of the strings of which were either broken or missing, another was relating Christmas tales to his comrades whose attention was riveted upon his words.

This was Timofey, the Thief, as he was called, who declared that he had never been so happy as in prison, because there at least he had food, and clothes, and had a roof over his head, luxuries which at times during the course of his adventurous and criminal life he had often been without. This Timofey was considered as something like a hero in the prison. He had not killed anybody, but he had taken a part in so many holdups and robberies that his reputation had preceded his arrival in the penal settlement, where he had immediately assumed a preponderant position by virtue of his past misdeeds. He was always jovial and pleasant, and ready to oblige others, and he had ever so many amusing stories to relate about his past life, before he had been arrested and sent to prison for several years, the number of which he had already forgotten, so satisfied did he feel with his present lot. The guards all liked him, because he had never been caught in an act of disobedience or insubordination; and yet there was a general feeling all around, among the convicts as well as among the turnkeys, that Timofey had better be left alone, and not be interfered with, because if aroused, he might . . . well, he might turn out disagreeable, and we all know what this word means in a prison.

I was looking at all the shaved heads around me, and wondering what I could do next, when a deep sigh aroused my attention. It came from a fellow sitting a little apart from the other prisoners, all by himself, a fellow who was known by the name of Illia the Fool. He was a newcomer, and it was his first Christmas in the prison. His nickname had come to him, because of the complete indifference which he displayed in regard to everything that was going on around him, and of his dumb docility not only before the guards, but also in complying with the many requirements of the other convicts, who tyrannized over him, and used him as a kind of man of all work, saddling upon him those tasks of the prison which no one cared to perform, such as to carry out the pails and so forth.

He was about 30 years old, a short, rather stout fellow, blind in one eye, with a face deeply scarred by smallpox. He had committed murder, and was serving a life sentence, but he had never been heard to complain about it, nor to imply that his sentence had not been a just one, but seemed to have accepted it, as something that was due him, and this was what had earned for him, at least partly, his nickname of "Fool," which Timofey had been the first one to give him.

ON THIS Christmas afternoon, Illia the Fool appeared to me to be different from what he was on other days. For one thing he had sighed, and this I had never heard him do before. There was such bitter sorrow in the sound of that sigh, moreover, that it struck a soft chord in my heart, and made it ache as it had not done for a long while. I drew nearer to the man and ventured to ask him of what he had been thinking, that made him so particularly sad.

"Oh, you could not understand it," he replied. "I was only thinking of my small Wassia, of my little goat. What has happened to Wassia? This is the only thing I would like to know. Oh, if anybody could just tell me where is Wassia and whether Wassia is happy and well cared for, I would ask nothing further from God, or from His Saints!"

"Who is Wassia, will you not tell me?" I enquired, expecting that he would mention the name of a brother or of a sweetheart.

He looked at me, replying with an accent of surprise, "Why, I have just told you, Wassia was my little goat."

I still did not understand, but not wishing to grieve the poor fellow, who was in real misery, I asked him if he would not relate to me the history of Wassia.

"It is Christmas Day, and perhaps it would soothe your grief if you told your story to someone who could sympathize with you," I added.

He sighed again.

"Ah! Little Pigeon, how could you understand it? But you are right all the same; perhaps it will do me good to tell you!"

And as he spoke, I saw a tear drop from his one eye and roll down his cheek.

"I will tell you, Little Pigeon," he said at last, "I will tell you, although I have never told it to any one before; there are days when one must speak or one will die. You see, Little Pigeon, I never had a mother. I was found lying in a basket—a baby just a few days old—by the grave-digger of our village in the churchyard, when he went to dig a grave for a woman who had died that morning. The grave-digger was a good man and he took me to his home.

The same afternoon, the priest baptized me and they gave me the name of Illia because it had been on the day of Illia the Prophet that I had been found. Since no one knew who were my parents, of course people thought that my mother had never been married, and had abandoned me out of shame.

As I grew up, the other boys laughed at me and taunted me with my disgrace, until I used to think sometimes I hated them all. But still I was not unhappy; you must not think that I was unhappy, Little Pigeon, because it would not be true. The grave-digger was a good man. His wife also, was a good woman who cared for me, gave me food, made me some clothes, and did not beat me too much or too often.

Then when I was about 10 years old, God sent them a little daughter. I loved that child so much, so much. Anisia she was called, and I used to watch over Anisia while her mother was out in the fields working. I rocked her in my arms, drove the flies away from her face, and led her by the hand when she began to walk.

Then one day when a big dog wanted to bite her because she had teased it, I threw myself before her; you can see here, Little Pigeon, where that dog bit me instead of her," and as he spoke, he raised the sleeve of his shirt, and made me look at a deep scar on his arm.

"Anisia was all the world to me; when I was 20 years old and she was 10, I used to take her on my knee and to tell her when she was grown up, I would marry her. A neighbor heard me one day, and told my foster mother, who scolded me and said that I must not say such things to Anisia because it was putting wrong ideas into her head, because she could never become my wife. But still I went on saying them to her, only I took care that no one should hear me. I really thought then that Anisia loved me and would always care for me.

"WELL, Little Pigeon, one day after I had worked hard in the fields and got very wet from the rain that surprised us on our way home, I became ill, and the feldscher who was called to see me said that I had caught smallpox. He took me away to the hospital in the district town.

"After I had recovered, my face was what you see it today, and I had lost the sight of my right eye. I was not an object for any girl to like to look upon, and was wise enough to know it. So when I returned home, I did not say any more to Anisia that I wanted to marry her; I only tried to please her, and to make myself useful to her.

"After I had scraped a little money together, I bought her a present for Christmas—a little goat she had admired one morning when she had seen it in the village. It was such a pretty little white thing. We called it Wassia. I used to take care of it and to feed it, so that Anisia had no trouble whatever with it, but only played with it when she liked."

He stopped for a moment, the tears gathering in his one eye, then asked me, "Are you sure I do not bore you with my story, Little Pigeon?"

"No, no, go on," I replied, because by that time I had become intensely interested.

"Well, time went on; at last Anisia was grown up; the boys began to hang around her, and the women to say she would soon be married. She was the beauty of the place, and Foma, the innkeeper, who was reputed to be the richest man in the whole village, was constantly seen with her and danced with her at all the harvest festivals to which she was bidden.

"This did not please me, because I knew that Foma was a good-for-nothing fellow who had been in many scrapes with girls, always coming out of them by some trick or other. I tried to warn Anisia, but she refused to listen to me, and at last became very angry with me, saying that she would never speak to me again unless I stopped talking about Foma. I could see that she was quite changed. She did not care any more for Wassia and ceased to caress or play with it.

"So that poor Wassia, who by this time was quite an old goat, seemed to feel it, looking so sad when unable to attract her attention that I had to take it in my arms to comfort it. Then we would weep together, and I thought at least there remained one being in the world who cared for me, to whom I could be useful.

"It is dreadful, Little Pigeon, to feel quite alone in the world. This was my case; and when one day, Anisia came to tell me that she was going to marry Foma after Lent, I felt that if Wassia had not been there, I would just have gone down to the river and thrown myself in it.

"Well, time passed, the summer was over, and the harvest had all been taken in. Then Anisia and Foma were married. Anisia came to show herself to me in all her bridal finery, with quantities of red beads around her neck, and a nice red handkerchief tied around her throat. Foma had a new pair of boots bought for the occasion, and a new pink shirt; and everybody said that they were a comely pair.

"Before she went away to her husband's isba, Anisia came to me again, and told me that she would leave me Wassia to take care of; and in saying so seemed to imply that she was conferring a great favor upon me. Perhaps she was. Who knows!

"Well, Little Pigeon, I hardly ever saw her afterwards, and Wassia was all that was left to me. My little goat! It did not mind my one eye and scarred face. We used to sleep together on the straw in the barn; it would put its head upon my shoulder, and lick my face with its tongue. I was happy then, Little Pigeon, because I could imagine that it was Anisia who was kissing me.

"WELL, this did not last long," he went on, his voice trembling a little, "there came a day when Anisia returned, and told me that she wanted to have Wassia back, to take it to her own cottage to play with as she used to do when she was a little girl. By that time I knew that she was not as happy as she had expected to be with Foma, but this was not a reason why she should want to take Wassia away from me, who had nothing else but this little animal to make me happy.

"I begged her to leave me the goat, I said that she would not know how to take care of it, that Wassia was an old goat requiring more attention than she would have the time or the patience to give. I said everything I could think of to induce her to leave me the animal, but she refused to listen to me.

"She laughed when I told her that Wassia was all I had left in the world to remind me of her. She laughed and said that her husband wanted Wassia, and she was going to take it away with her and give it to her husband!

"Then, Little Pigeon, something came over me I had never felt before. I happened to have an ax in my hand with which I had been chopping wood—and I killed Anisia!"

And a deep sob shook his strong frame.

"Fool, oh, you fool, where are you?" called a voice from the other end of the room, where the convicts were all talking as loud as they could now that their attention had been diverted from the sadness of their own lot by the stories Timofey had been telling them.

"Fool, fool, where are you?" one of the prisoners cried out again. "Come over here, you are wanted to empty the parascha."

"I am coming, I am coming," responded Illia as he rushed to obey, murmuring between his teeth, "Wassia—who can tell me what has become of her! Where is Wassia?"

Eager Dry Raiders Forget Small Item

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (U.P.).—Marie Souter, Bartlesville night club operator, has complained to the State crime bureau that two of its agents neglected to pay for steaks and drinks they ordered in her place before they raided it.

Agents Golden Kennedy and Jess Lea, who seized 21 fifths and 30 pints of liquor in the club explained they simply forgot to pay their checks in the excitement.

"We poured out the liquor anyway," Kennedy said. Oklahoma is a dry State.

No Help From Him

MILWAUKEE (U.P.).—A Milwaukee parking lot owner refuses to give any help to his competition, the parking meters. He posted this blunt sign in the window of the lot office: "No Nickels."

Finger Jog Basis

Before primitive men learned to write, they used knotted cords for keeping records, notes the National Geographic Society. This device, called "quipus" or "quipos" from the famous Inca practice, was the forerunner of the still-followed habit of tying string around a finger as a memory jog.

Chimes Go Haywire

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (U.P.).—Churchgoers did not answer the call when the hymn chimes at the Central Baptish Church suddenly aroused them at 5:30 a. m. A power failure had disrupted the chime clock and caused a 10-minute period of religious music to boom forth.

O'Donnell

BEHIND THE SCENES: Working in the background on winding up the affairs of Real Estate Mortgage & Guaranty Corp. is J. Joseph O'Donnell, its secretary-treasurer. Earlier this year, the Washington firm surprised financial circles with a first liquidating dividend of $45 a share to stockholders. O'Donnell, the only full-time officer left in the firm, quietly has been working on remaining assets, and it is expected that shareholders will receive a second handsome liquidating dividend in a few months. It is anticipated that this payment may be between $10 and $12 a share. Old-timers can remember when R. E. M. & G. stock sold around $1 a share back in the early 30s. The firm at one time owned or operated as many as 15 buildings in Washington. O'Donnell, a graduate of the University of Virginia, has been associated with the company for 17 years.

LOANS AT PEAK: Mortgage loans of the 28-member associations of the D. C. Building and Loan League totaled $371,153,271 as of November 30, an increase of 13 percent over the same 1949 date. F. Willson Camp, league secretary, also noted that savers increased their balances by more than $28 million dollars during the year and now have 343 million dollars to their credit. Assets of $411,044,093 at the end of November showed a gain of $46,500,000 for the 12 months and reached a new peak.

ODD LOTS: The Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, through Henry J. Kaufman & Associates, has launched a 24-week ad campaign to explain association policies . . . The 75 cents a share dividend just declared by the United Air Lines is the firm's first dividend since 1946 . . . November operating revenues of Class One railroads are estimated at $677,887,831, an increase of 18 percent over the same 1949 month . . . Mellon National Bank & Trust Co., Pittsburgh, has transferred 50 million dollars from accumulated undivided profits and reserves to surplus account, making the later 140 million dollars . . . Secondary offering of 100,000 shares of Southern Co. at $10.50 a share was oversubscribed, according to Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane .

RECORD SALES: Washington Gas Light Co. yesterday reported record sales for November and the first 11 months. Last month's sales totaled $16,283,729 therms, a gain of 11.87 percent over the like 1949 period. Volume for the first 11 months amounted to 165,341,792 therms, a husky increase of 20 percent over the same period last year.

ELECTION: Vincent A. Williams is the new president of the Grocery Manufacturer's Representatives of Washington, succeeding G. H. Altvater. Williams is associated with Libby, McNeill & Libby. Others elected are Ralph P. Martin, Kraft Foods Co., first vice president; E. J. Roche, Corn Products Sales Co., second vice president; S. L. Taylor, Sunshine Biscuits, Inc., secretary; H. K. Kent, John H. Wilkins Co., recording secretary, and H. L. Golladay, food broker, treasurer. Chosen for the board of directors were Bennet Beale, J. B. Breidenstein, J. F. Merkle, M. E. Pusey, Leroy Rider and Clyde P. White.

FETES: Lewis Edwin Ryan, Washington advertising agency, will give a Yule party Friday for its employes, celebrating one of the most successful years in its 45-year history . . . G. C. The Federal Diary

Non-Defense Agencies Face Sharp Budget, Personnel Reductions

The Government's nondefense agencies face a tight squeeze on both money and personnel. This is what they'll be up against:

1. A sharp reduction in their budgets. On order from the President, the Budget Bureau is revising downward the proposed 1952 budgets of all non-defense activities—budgets the agencies thought had been okayed.

More than 600 million dollars is reported already to have been slashed from the tentative '52 budgets. Among the departments hardest hit in the revision are Agriculture and Interior.

2. A forced reduction in personnel of the nondefense agencies. Smaller budgets, of course, will mean reduced personnel. But that's only part of the story. Reduced personnel for non-defense agencies also is closely related with the proposed—

3. Longer work week. Remember this—if and when the Federal service is placed on a full 6-day, 48-hour work week, it will be accompanied by tough orders to further reduce non-defense personnel.

For example, let's say that a non-defense agency has 5000 employes and it's ordered on a full 6-day, 48-hour week which would mean a 20 percent increase in working hours for the employes involved. The longer work week order would be accompanied by a directive to reduce personnel by 20 per cent, or 1000 employes. The surplus workers would be transferred to defense jobs. A plan along these lines is what the Government planners have in mind.

4. Also in the works is a plan to whittle down the staffs of nondefense agencies before they are placed on longer work weeks. This could be done by giving the defense agencies top priority on all available job-seekers; by forbidding employes to transfer from defense to nondefense agencies, and by refusing to allow non-defense agencies to fill vacancies except in extraordinary circumstances.

Inside Government planners believe if these and perhaps other steps are taken soon that the nondefense agencies would be in a better position to adjust to a 6-day, 48-hour week on an economical basis.

Officials in the executive branch are faced with this reality—if they fail to cut back nondefense budgets and personnel the Congress is sure to take a whack at them.

Senator Hendrickson (R., N. J.), is pushing a resolution which he sponsored along with several of his colleagues to force the transfer of some nondefense employes to defense agencies. Several senators pledged their support to his plan in recent Senate speeches. Also, the Senate and House Appropriations Committee will closely examine the budgets of nondefense activities.

Meantime, the way is being cleared for the placing of many civilians in the Army, Navy and Air Force on longer work weeks in early January. At White House direction, the Civil Service Commission is heading up a study to fix conditions and standards under which other agencies would be allowed to go on lengthened hours.

The question of how classified and postal employes should be paid for overtime work has officials at sixes and sevens. This development you should know about:

Several strategically placed members of Congress are interested in a plan to pay classifieds and postals straight time when they are placed on a full 6-day, 48-hour work week. Also, they are cool to the several bills that would boost basic salaries of classified and postal people because they believe longer hours for them is a mere question of time. Eight hours additional a week at straight time pay would boost an employe's take-home pay by 20 percent.

On the other hand, the third big employe group in Government, the 600,000 laborers and mechanics (per diems) are being given basic pay boosts to enable them to meet higher living costs. In addition, they are paid straight time-and-a-half for all hours worked over 40 in any week. Also, more and more per diems are being placed on longer work weeks.

CD Status Report Asked In County

The Prince Georges County Commissioners yesterday directed P. E. Clark, county director of civil defense, to give a full accounting of the accomplishments of his office to date.

The action followed charges by two civic leaders that the county's civil defense program is lagging.

Walter F. Mulligan, president of the County Civic Federation, and Fred K. Barr, president of the Seat Pleasant-Spauldings District Civic Federation, strongly urged the appointment of a director who could give full time to civil defense duties.

Clark, who is also the county's agricultural agent, was appointed to the non-salaried civil defense post about five months ago.

Clark agreed with their contention that the job is a fulltime one. He offered to "withdraw" in favor of a fulltime director.

Mulligan asserted, "We want immediate action. It is such a big job we feel we should be making better headway than we are."

Clark said the biggest need at the present is an educational program to counteract "hysteria" which has mounted "within the past several weeks."

He outlined work that has been done in coordinating efforts of the Red Cross, police and fire departments, medical groups and the Board of Education.

This account failed to impress Mulligan, who commented: "We have no civil defense program."

Board President Thomas E. Latimer asked Clark to submit a complete report on the status of the program "so that we can determine where we stand and decide what to do from that point on."

House to Consider U. S. Measure Today; Prospects Dim For Dispersal Bill

The House today will consider a national civil defense measure which calls for a program shared by Federal, State and local govrenments.

Both the House and Senate Armed Services Committees have given unanimous approval to similar drafts of the measure. House approval today appears likely but Senator Taft (R., Ohio) indicated yesterday he may try to hold up Senate approval until the new Congress meets in January.

The Senate committee report on the bill, released yesterday, said the civil defense program will help prevent the country's productive power from being knocked out by a "sudden, devastating" atomic attack.

Meanwhile, the Senate Appropriations Committee may vote today on the District's request to spend $337,500 more on the city's civil defense, the bulk of it to provide a city-wide air raid warning system. The House refused to vote a cent but the Senators are expected to approve most, if not all, the money requested.

District Commissioners John Russell Young and Guy Mason as well as acting civil defense chief John E. Fondahl and other city officials pleaded for the money at a closed session yesterday. President Herbert P. Leeman of the Federation of Citizens Associations likewise asked the Senators to vote the money. He spoke also for the Interfederation Council, made up of suburban and District citizens groups.

Another House Public Works Committee hearing on the proposal to disperse part of the Government into Maryland and Virginia failed to get any action from that committee. Chairman Whittington (D., Miss.) said afterward he doubted if the measure would be voted on at this session.

Chairman Chavez (D., N. M.) of the Senate Public Works Committee said his group will consider the measure later this week. But he too doubted there will be any floor action this year.

For 6 Months

Trial Held Up To Treat Drug Addict

District Judge Matthew F. McGuire interrupted the trial of a drug addict yesterday and continued the case for six months in an effort to rehabilitate the accused.

Morris A. Katz, 36, operator of a restaurant at 800 K st. nw., was standing trial on a charge of forging a prescription for the drug, demerol.

United States Attorney Arthur McLaughlin had just completed his case against Katz. A druggist had testified he filled the prescription. A doctor had testified that the signature on the prescription was not his. A handwriting expert had testified that the signature on the prescription was forged by Katz.

Then defense attorney Josiah Lyman made his opening statement to the jury. Katz became addicted to drugs when he was undergoing treatment for serious injuries incurred in a Maryland automobile accident, he said.

Katz's wife had spent large amounts of money in an effort to cure her husband of the addiction, Lyman added.

At this point Judge McGuire interrupted and called for a bench conference. A short time later he turned to the jury and said:

"Inasmuch as the defendant is an addict and the Government feels that the law was not violated with the intent that is usually present in the violation of a criminal statute, and also since a sincere effort has been made to rehabilitate the defendant, this case is being presently withdrawn from the jury."

Judge McGuire also noted that Katz had waived his constitutional privilege against double jeopardy and continued the case to June 19, 1951.

The Government interposed no objection to the unusual continuance.

McLaughlin said later that if in six months Katz has been rehabilitated, the Government must then decide whether to proceed with the prosecution of the case.

Montgomery Animal Shelter Plans Shelved

The Montgomery County Council decided yesterday to abandon, for the time being, plans for construction of an animal shelter at West Kensington.

About 150 Kensington area residents, armed with banners declaring, "Kensington will not go to the dogs," appeared at the meeting of the council last week to protest location of the animal shelter on a 2½-acre tract on the Chapman estate in Kensington. The land already has been purchased by the county.

The land was purchased and the dog shelter ordered built by the previous County Council. The present Council, elected in November, said the protesting citizens' apprehensions are unjustified "It is certainly not the intent of the Council to construct or foster any facility . . . which will constitute a nuisance, depreciate surrounding property values or be reprehensible in any manner," the council declared.

In other actions at its regular Rockville meeting yesterday the County Council:

1. Appropriated $12,000 for establishment of a division of planning, to include a chief engineer, two draftsmen and a full time secretary for the Upper Montgomery County Planning Commission. The new commission will become operative January 1.

2. Appropriate $4000 for establishment of a divison of civil defense. The division will come directly under the Director of Civil Defense, Edward L. Foster, who is unpaid. It will have a coordinator, at not more than $3600 a year, and a secretary. The new division begins operating January 1.

3. Postponed approval of bonds to purchase two additional units of county parks until the county engineer decides that they are within the taking lines provided by law.

ABC Revokes Liquor License For Gambling in SE Grill

The District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board revoked a restaurant owner's liquor license yesterday after finding him guilty on nine counts of permitting gambling in his establishment.

Revoked, effective January 2, was the Class C license of George J. Mantzuranis, who operates the J. & J. Grill at 913 8th st. se.

The board heard Police Pvt. Richard J. Gillespie testify that he had successfully placed horse or numbers bets with persons at the grill on nine occasions last May and June.

On each occasion, he tesified, either Mantzuranis or his wife was at the grill. One time, Mantzuranis sat at the table while he placed a bet, Gillespie said. Records introduced at the hearing showed the persons with whom Gillespie said he had placed bets had pleaded guilty to gambling charges in court.

Mantzuranis told the board he had not known that bets were being placed.

The board also refused permission to Mrs. Dorothy W. Courembis to operate a retail liquor store at 206 1st st. se., across from the old House office Building.

Opposition to the application had come from two members of Congress, a group planning a Republican club next door and the Southeast Washington Citizens Association.

The board said it turned down the application because the location was not suitable and the neighbors were opposed.

At the Anacostia Naval Air Station, Santa Claus went modern, floating down in a giant Piasecki helicopter to the welcome of about 500 children whooping it up in front of the Administration Building.

The program included movie cartoons, candy, bus rides to and from the station, and a greeting by Capt. H. W. Taylor, the commanding officer and host.

The annual Christmas breakfast of the Washington Optimist Club was held at 7:30 a. m. yesterday in the Mayflower Hotel, Hal Hellikson, president of the club, presented $5000 worth of Savings bonds to the Washington Boys Club.

$22,500 Damages Awarded in Crash Ruled 'Excessive'

Damages of $22,500 awarded a District couple by a jury for damages suffered when their automobile collided with a Capital Transit bus, were "grossly excessive," Chief Judge Bolitha J. Laws of District Court has ruled.

Judge Laws granted the company's motion for a new trial, stating that the excessive verdict "resulted from acts and arguments" of the couple's lawyer, Dorsey K. Offutt.

A District Court jury awarded Mr. and Mrs. Harvey L. Peterson the damages for head and back injuries suffered in February, 1948, when their automobile was struck by a bus at 6th and P sts. nw.

Peterson, 56, was awarded $7500 by the jury, and Mrs. Peterson, $15,000. They live at 513 E st. se.

Cadet Training to Be Credited On Academy Appointments

A plan to give credit for high school cadet training to persons seeking appointment to West Point or Annapolis was approved yesterday by the District Commissioners.

The plan applies only to competitive examinations for nominations of candidates from the District, not to entrance exams given by the academies.

It will work this way, the Commissioners announced:

Cadet applicants will be given one and two-thirds free points on their exams for each school semester during which they were cadets. Ten points is the maximum that will be given. That could be obtained by a person who was a cadet for three years.

The bonus would also be given to District residents for cadet training at schools outside the District where "equivalent" courses are offered.

The program to give cadets a headstart over other candidates was approved generally last winter as a means of stimulating interest in the District school cadet program and attracting more applications for the service academies.

Court of Appeals Reverses Decision In Real Estate Deal

The Municipal Court of Appeals yesterday rescinded a real estate commission awarded by Municipal Court Judge Thomas Scalley to Dickson's Realty Co.

The appellate court ruled that the company never obtained a purchaser ready to buy on terms authorized by Mr. and Mrs. William T. Heflin.

The Heflins authorized the company to sell certain property on specific terms. A purchaser was found, but the Court of Appeals ruled that his terms were not those of the sellers.

Chambers Argues Minimum Wage Charges for Press

The case against W. W. Chambers, sr., the undertaker, charged with violation of the minimum wage law in connection with women employes, was continued yesterday in Municipal Court to January 4.

Chambers told Judge Nadine L. Gallagher that he wanted to defend himself because he knew more about his case than his lawyers. Judge Gallagher told him he could do so if he fired his lawyers, but Chambers declined to do so.

Education Board Favors Central Cafeteria Dept.

Measure Designed To End Headaches In Current School Lunch Organization

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

Legislation to set up a central cafeteria department designed to eliminate the headaches in the recent school lunch program was approved yesterday by a committee of the Board of Education.

Schools at present individually operate their own cafeterias as private businesses. In recent weeks School Board Vice President Adelbert W. Lee has been critical of the program and of the distribution of Federal surplus foods and grants made available to the schools under the National School Lunch Act.

The board's committee on legislation unanimously approved the wording of a bill that will be submitted to Congress through the commissioners.

The proposed legislation provides for central management and purchasing and for supervision by the centralized management of the Federal grants.

The bill will be submitted to the full school board when it meets at 3:30 p. m. today at the Franklin Administration Building, 13th and K sts. nw.

The board also will take up a recommendation approved yesterday by the board's buildings and grounds committee to transfer the white Ludlow and Maury Schools to use by Negro students.

The schools are located in northeast Washington where white enrollments have been dropping while Negro enrollments have been on the upswing.

First Assistant School Superintendent Garnet C. Wilkinson told committee members that the transfer will eliminate part-time instruction and overcrowded classes at the Negro Lovejoy and Logan Schools.

Gardner L. Bishop, president of the Consolidated Parent Group, urged the committee to recommend the end of the segregated school system rather than the transfer of the two school buildings.

In Montgomery

Boy, 7, Hit By Auto, Dies 6 Days Later

Seven-year-old Martin Hines, of Olney, Md., who was struck last Wednesday by an auto, died of his injuries yesterday in Montgomery County General Hospital.

Driver of the car was Mrs. Geneveve Wells, of Brookville, Md., former member of the Maryland House of Delegates, wartime executive director of Civilian Defense in the county and now administrative assistant in the Silver Spring office of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission. She told police the boy darted in front of her car. She tried to avoid him, she said, but it was too late.

The accident happened on Georgia ave., in front of a hatchery operated by the boy's father, Charles Hines.

In Washington, police were investigating an accident which sent Anna O. Dakovic, 54, of 1207 N st. nw. to Emergency Hospital with a possible ankle fracture and a possible head injury.

Police said the woman was brought into the office of Dr. Richard M. Rosenberg, deputy District coroner, yesterday at about 5 p. m. by three men who told him they found her lying in the street. The men left without giving police any further information. Police said the woman had contusions about the head and lacerations on her face. She was in undetermined condition last night.

Bus Driver Cleared In Death of Girl

Witnesses said the child ran into the path of the bus as it was backing into the school yard at St. John's Parochial School, Woodland rd. and Georgia ave., Silver Spring. The bus was under contract to carry children from the school.

The girl was the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Samuel Allen, 18 Fawcett st., Kensington, Md.

Funds Boosted For Expanding Alcohol Clinic

The District Commissioners yesterday added $19,760 to the alcoholic clinic's present $83,000 annual budget to permit expansion of its work.

Clinic Director Leopold E. Wexberg said the money will be used to hire a clinical psychologist, nurse, social worker and clinic aide.

The clinic, authorized by Congress, draws many of its patients from persons convicted on drunk charges. However, it can now accept only about 15 of the 300 drunks who appear in court each week, Wexberg said.

Wexberg said that with the additional staff members he could handle a larger number of court cases and also send workers to recruit patients at the Occoquan Workhouse and Lorton Reformatory.

The clinic is financed from liquor license fees. The portion of liquor fees earmarked for the clinic normally would not be sufficient to meet the increased budget, Wexberg said. But unused funds that accumulated in the 2½ years between the time of the clinic's authorization and its opening will be sufficient to make up the difference for about four years, he said.

Vienna, Va., Pilot Killed Testing Plane for Navy

Lieut. Comdr. Hugh L. Wood, 33, of Vienna, Va., was killed yesterday when the experimental plane he was testing for the Navy crashed near Edwards Air Force Base, Muroc, Calif.

The plane—turbine-powered, but propeller-driven—was the first of its type made for the Navy by Douglas. Called the XA2D, it was designed to operate from carriers.

Officials did not disclose the cause of the crash. Last August, Lieutenant Commander Wood suffered severe lacerations and a fractured vertebrae when he crash-landed an F6F Hellcat at the Anacostia Naval Air Station.

Married and the father of three children, he lived at 20 Dogwood lane in Vienna. He was attached to the Piloted Aircraft Division at the Bureau of Aeronautics here.

Chronic Illness Screening Set At Gallinger

The District Comissioners yesterday approved a Public Health Service plan to screen for undiagnosed chronic diseases all patients going to Gallinger Hospital.

The plan, financed by Public Health Service funds, would set up a production line type of test stations for examination for major detectable diseases and disorders.

Designated as a pilot program, it is geared to include not only patients going to the hospital's outpatient clinics but the ambulatory hospital admissions and emergency cases, District food handlers, school children, industrial groups, District government employes, and welfare wards, as the program progresses.

The purpose is to uncover the diseases in their early stages, when they can best be treated.

The tests to be given include detection examinations for hypertension (high blood pressure), diabetes, heart disease, tuberculosis, some types of cancer, syphilis, nephritis (kidney disease), anemia, vision and hearing impairment, and nutritional status defents.

At Gallinger Hospital, it will be set up to examine as many as 300 individuals a day.

Medical director in charge of the project is Dr. Mary Elizabeth H. Kent, Public Health Service medical officer. The program would get under way shortly after January 1.

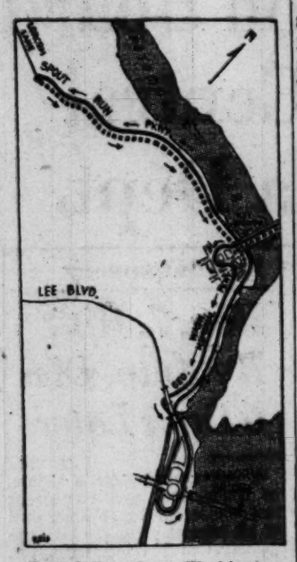
New Spout Run Link Has a Little Kink



Dotted line shows Washington-bound lane of new extension of George Washington Parkway. Virginia commuters can turn directly onto Key Bridge. It's more difficult coming home. Solid line shows traffic is routed to Memorial Bridge before it can return and strike the new section

Virginia motorists who commute to the District by way of Key Bridge are finding the new Spout Run extension of George Wahington Memorial pkwy. a "one-way" proposition.

This fact is causing something of a "rhubarb" between Arlington County and Virginia officials on one side and the Federal Bureau of Public Roads on the other.

The Key Bridge commuters can drive directly from the mile-long Federal parkway—which opened Saturday—to the bridge, on their way to work in the morning.

But on their way home, they can't reach the new parkway from Key Bridge without running all the way from Rosslyn Circle to the Virginia end of Memorial Bridge and back again.

Motorists using Memorial Bridge or coming from the Pentagon can get to the new link directly, over the old leg of the parkway, from Memorial Bridge to Rosslyn.

Clifton Stoneburner, Arlington County's highway engineer, thinks there is a simple solution to the Key Bridge motorists' problem—an "off-ramp" leading from the Virginia end of the bridge down to the west-bound lane of the Federal parkway.

Then, Stoneburner said, Virginia commuters could use the Spout Run parkway-Key Bridge route both going and coming.

In a June 22 letter to the Bureau of Public Roads, Gen. J. A. Anderson, head of the Virginia Highway Commission, agreed. He promised that Virginia would contribute half of the $250,000 estimated cost of the ramp.

The bureau, however, hasn't bought the idea yet. Joseph Barnett, chief of the bureau's urban highway branch, explained: "We thought it best to wait and determine by traffic studies just how much traffic would use such a ramp." General Anderson has estimated "conservatively" that more than 10,000 vehicles daily would use the new parkway in both directions if the ramp were built.

At present, Anderson said, the 5000 morning commuters using the parkway-Key Bridge route must return at night by Lee Hwy. "in the same old traffic jam."

Alexandria Wins

Annexation's Final Decree Is Signed

A final decree awarding Alexandria 7½ square miles of Fairfax County territory at a cost of about $500,000 was filed in Fairfax Circuit Court yesterday.

The decree was entered by Judges Paul E. Brown of Fairfax; Jeff Walter of Accomac, and Walter T. McCarthy of Arlington. They handed down a verbal opinion November 5 in favor of Alexandria. Terms of the final order were essentially the same as those outlined in the verbal ruling.

Attorney for the county said yesterday an appeal was "probable."

The annexation, effective January 1, gives Alexandria virtually all the land it laid out in its original annexation ordinance. Minor changes leave all of Lincolnia School property in Fairfax County, but places all of the Dowden Terrace Subdivision within Alexandria's new limits.

The decree orders Alexandria to pay the county $102,801 for the Lee-Jackson School; $53,100 for the Shirley-Duke School site; $172,256 as its share of debts contracted by the county's Sanitary District No. 1 and to assume 6 percent of existing county school debts of an estimated $2,500,000.

The county retains the right to collect charges from users of county sewer lines within the annexed territory and to levy the charges against any persons who connect subsequently to the county's disposal system.

Driver Badly Hurt in Crash Held Negligent

A former Bethesda policeman was convicted of negligent homicide yesterday in an accident in which he suffered brain injuries, a broken jaw, a broken back, a broken pelvis and loss of memory.

He is Fred Benjamin Johnson, 42, 4413 Chestnut st., Bethesda.

Returning From Cruise

Traveling north on 7th st. nw., Johnson turned left in front of a northbound street car into Constitution ave., and collided with a southbound trolley, police said.

Johnson took the stand before Municipal Court Judge George D. Neilson to testify that he knew he had been seriously injured but he did not know how.

In Hospital For Month

"They tell me I was hurt in an automobile accident," he said, "and they say it was this accident, but I just don't know."

Johnson said he had been in the hospital for more than a month. He said he spent two more weeks in his bed at home.

When a doctor prescribed walks in the fresh air, Johnson said he was forced to walk around one block continuously. If he left that block, he said, he was unable to remember where he lived and find his way back.

Judge Neilson described the case as "tragic" and "regrettable." Assistant United States Attorney Frederick Smithson concurred but Judge Neilson said that Johnson's one moment of negligence had cost Mrs. Sherry her life.

Woman Jailed For Refusing To Pay Fine

An Alexandria woman who refused to pay a court-imposed $5 fine for speeding was jailed for nearly two hours in Arlington County yesterday until her husband arrived to pay the fine.

Judge Hugh Reid levied the $5 penalty in County Court against Mrs. Jeane Philips, 29, who gave her address as 307 Lynnwood dr.

The attractive brunette promptly stood up and declared: "I refuse to pay it. I wasn't speeding and I'm not guilty!"

Without a word, Judge Reid filled out a jail-commitment card and turned Mrs. Philips over to Bailiff Fred Doe, who took her to the county jail.

Police said Mrs. Phillips, an advertising saleswoman for a Falls Church radio station, was arrested Monday on Lee blvd. by Police Pvt. Ernest Davis, who accused her of driving 50 miles per hour in a 35-mile zone.

Mrs. Phillips, police said, refused to accept the speeding ticket, so Private Davis took her before Arlington Judge Paul D. Brown, who issued a summons for her appearance in court yesterday.

While Mrs. Philips was jailed, her husband, Air Force First Lieut. Robert Philips, was notified. Philips paid the $5 penalty, plus $4.25 in costs.

VA Pressured Him, School Official Says

Eugene H. Rietzke, head of a Washington radio school, told a Congressional committee yesterday that the Veterans Administration used pressure tactics and "dishonest arithmetic" to force him into a "ruinous" contract for training veterans.

The key VA officials on whom Rietzke centered his fire, A. H. Monk, director of VA's training facility service, heard the testimony but declined comment, pending presentation of the agency's side of the case in a later hearing. Two officials were called to testify about it today.

Committee aides said the case was being presented as that of a high-grade institution which ran into many difficulties in dealings with the VA.

Teague Heads Committee

Rietzke testified as head of the Capital Radio Engineering Institute of Washington, in a hearing before the special committee investigating veterans' education. The committee chairman is Representative Olin E. Teague (D., Tex.).

Rietzke suggested that the VA had given him "the treatment" for critical testimony he gave in a Senate hearing last year.

After that hearing, said Rietzke, "negotiations were stalled by the VA, tuition payments were held up, my treasurer suffered a heart attack from which he died a few months later and my own health was seriously impaired."

He told reporters later two contracts where the VA set a tuition rate below what he wanted are now being appealed. He estimated they involved between $75,000 and $100,000.

Weichel Quizzes Him

Representative Alvin F. Weichel (R., Ohio) put Rietzke through a sharp quizzing in which the Congressman was sharply critical of correspondence school practices. Rietzke's school has some 12,000 correspondence students.

Weichel criticized correspondence schools for seeking to collect full tuition from students that take only part of a course. Rietzke said his school tries to collect full tuition unless there are extenuating circumstances, but added "we've never sued a student."

The committee also heard Earl M. Haddox, VA contract officer for the Washington regional office, outline the steps in VA negotiations with Rietzke. The latter indicated he liked Haddox's recommendations before the contract figures were cut in the central VA office. Haddox firmly declined to give his opinion about what had been done on the Rietzke contracts. He said they were matters of policy.

Fairfax Files Countersuit to Break Legal Blocks in Way of School Building Program

Fairfax County authorities have unleashed a legal counterattack on Paul E. Rhinehart, jr., whose two court suits have blocked sale of $11,480,000 in county bonds since last July.

Both the county's school board and its board of supervisors have filed suits in Fairfax Circuit Court to enjoin Rhinehart from further proceedings to "delay or prevent" sale of $10,500,000 in bonds for school construction and a $980,000 issue for a new courthouse addition.

The two new suits, almost identical in wording, assert that Rhinehart's proceedings are "vexatious in nature and brought without adequate legal basis for the purpose of delaying or preventing the sale of bonds."

Both ask the Circuit Court to force Rhinehart to post bond to "idemnify the county" for any future damage caused by delay in issuing the bonds.

In his most recent suit, filed 10 days ago, Rhinehart asked a declaratory judgment to nullify the bond issue on the ground that some of the residents, who originally voted for it in referendum last May 31, have been removed from the county by Alexandria's successful annexation suit. As a result, he contends, the remainder of the county now bears a heavier debt load than was originally proposed.

Earlier, Rhinehart was party to another suit questioning validity of the bonds on the ground that annexation suits were pending by both Alexandria and Falls Church. The suit was withdrawn October 26, after holding up the bond sale for more than four months.

Until all litigation is cleared up, county authorities are powerless to sell the bonds. With Rhinehart having the right of appeal, even if his suit is rejected by the Circuit Court, the proceedings conceivably can delay the bond sale another five months, according to attorneys for the county.

Along with the injunction suits, both the supervisors and the school board have filed formal answers to Rhinehart's motion for declaratory judgment.

Living in New Housing Development Settled Mostly By Young Couples With Small Children, Woman Asks How to Protect Neighbor's Child From Family Abuse

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I, with our two children, ages 4 and 5, live in a new housing development occupied chiefly by young couples who have small children. In our vicinity there are six families who have become good friends. Our children are, for the most part, well reared, and they play well together, with the exception of one household—in which the mother's pampering of her son causes trouble for all of us.

Mrs. Rex, I'll call her, has two children, —her son Jackie, 3, who is very large for his age and the apple of her eye; and a 4-year-old daughter Susan whom she treats most cruelly. Because of Jackie's spoiled disposition, all the neighbors, excepting me, are keeping her children out of their homes; and they don't allow their young to visit her yard. But as I dearly love little Susie I still permit her children to play with mine.

Susie is a very bright serious little girl, and very creative. If she and my 4-year-old are building a house or modeling in clay, and Jackie deliberately destroys their work, Mrs. Rex is either highly amused or indifferent—unless Susie tries to stop him. In which case she is beaten by mama and called "selfish" for opposing her brother. Susie is getting extremely nervous and unable to concentrate, and I am so sorry for her.

Little Jackie wantonly breaks my prize bric-a-brac, willfully scratches my heirloom piano, etc., while his mother beams on him. And if I timidly ask her to make him stop she merely defends him by saying, "Oh, he sees Susie do thus and so; that's why he does it." Susie must obey instantly or she is cuffed and abused; but Jackie's disobedience is overlooked. Mrs. Rex won't even correct Jackie for spitting on people, her excuse being, "He must see someone else do that." And if any of the neighbor children defend themselves against him, she is furious.

My husband, who says he sees a quarrel brewing over my championship of Susie, has ordered me to keep Mrs. Rex and her kids out of our home. And he, too, is tired of Jackie's disorderly behavior. However, if we join in the boycott, Susie will be deprived of all playmates, through no fault of hers. How can I open the mother's eyes to her damaging partiality to her son, without destroying our friendship? And how can I help Susie, whom we all love very much? C. B.

DEAR C. B.: You speak of Jackie's destructive treatment of your nice things, while his mother beams on him; then you ruefully add, "If I timidly ask her to make him stop, she defends him—" etc. This means that your behavior in the exchange is extremely faulty, too. In failing to take direct action to protect your property from sportive damage, you aren't living up to your age, authority and real strength in the circumstances.

Rather, you are reacting like an anxious child who has been slavishly drilled in politeness to others, while denied any assurance of rights of his own. And probably this was your early experience, the psychological bond in common you have with Susie, that stirs in you a strong sense of emotional identification with her distress and fires your compassion for her predicament.

Obviously it is almost more of an effort than you can muster, to challenge injustice done yourself and others; and such passivity is a neurotic manifestation, apt to overtake sensitive observant personalities who weren't adequately supported in formative years with the warmly encouraging mother-love that promotes strong character. Who were, to be blunt, the helpless victims of prejudiced maternal "rejection" in early life—which is Susie's piteous plight.

If you are to be a helpful influence on Susie's behalf, you first must perceive and overcome your stymied immaturity of attitude in dealing with Mrs. Rex. It is doubtful whether you can educate her to a saving recognition of her double-barreled crime against humanity, in crushing Susie's spirit while upholding Jackie's riotous selfishness. But if your interest can make a difference for the better, your contribution must be made by way of confident mature example. Anxious pleading won't change anything, and could be construed as overstepping.

Now, to give you the pitch of an effective adult performance in the circumstances: When neighbor children, including Mrs. Rex's, are playing with your children on your premises, you are the governing elder for the time being, if bad behavior erupts. This rule holds, no matter how many visiting mamas are present to champion their possibly unruly offspring. Thus if a visiting brat makes a nuisance of himself in games, or threatens damage to your possessions, you should become "the law" immediately.

With a confident air and a cordial glance at his mama, step in firmly and put the miscreant under quarantine, while you spell out the house rules of acceptable behavior. If he's mauling bric-a-brac, the rule is "don't touch." If he is spoiling games, he may play by himself, sit quietly, or cooperate as the price of return to the group. If he fights all these suggestions, the downright alternative is, "Time to go home then; but hurry back when you're ready to behave nicely." And send him packing. With Mrs. Rex the butt of a neighborhood boycott, she'll probably settle for your decisive new terms if you leave the door open; and thus you may edify her while giving Susie an experience of security under your roof, at least. THE DAYS BEFORE CHRISTMAS — It will be a big Christmas at the Naval Air Station at Anacostia. A party for children of the station employes was held yesterday and another for a group of orphaned children will be held December 23. Wrapping packages for the children are (left to right) Mrs. Edward O. Sentar, Mrs. Julianne G. Vogel, civilian personnel assistant; and Mrs. H. W. Wife of Israel Diplomat Lauds Hadassah Aid

"The wards were so crowded that children with high temperatures had to wait for space," Mrs. Chaim Herzog told the Midtown group of Hadassah yesterday.

Mrs. Herzog was describing the Hadassah clinic in Israel where she was treated two years ago after being wounded. She was an officer in the Israel Defense Army when she received cuts and a concussion.

She stayed only eight days in the clinic, she told the Hadassah members at the Jewish Community Center meeting, but she had to spend an additional two months recuperating at home.

The wife of the Military, Naval and Air Attache of the Israeli Embassy commended Hadassah for its medical work in Israel. Hadassah supports 63 welfare stations throughout the country, a children's tuberculosis sanitarium, a new hospital in Beersheba as well as five temporary buildings in Jerusalem since the Mount Scopus Hospital is inaccessible. Hadassah medical care is available to Jews, Christians and Arabs alike, Mrs. Herzog said.

A Pocket Full of Colored Chiffon Scarves

Here's a fashion fad of the moment that is a "natural" for Christmas giving as well. It's the colored chiffon squares—"all silk and a yard wide" to paraphrase an old saying—and it has the fashion blessing of Paris, Rome, the Riviera resorts, New York, California—practically every place in the world where smart women foregather.

You wear them singly or in twos and threes—in contrasting colors—or smarter still—in two or three shades of the same color family. As you wear them knotted around the neck, or tied together in the back to form a long ascot, and for a really dramatic effect on a dark dress, trail two or three from a pocket to form a soft cascade at the side of a dress.

Justice, Mrs. Douglas Announce Daughter's Betrothal at Tea

By Marie McNair and Elizabth Maguire

JUSTICE AND MRS. WILLIAM O. DOUGLAS entertained at tea yesterday to announce to their friends the engagement of their daughter, Mildred, to Robert Valentine, son of Mr. and Mrs. Vey J. Valentine of Seattle, Wash.

Mildred received with her parents yesterday, wearing a short black taffeta frock with gardenias sent from California by her fiance. Mrs. Douglas, who looks young enough to be her daughter's sister, wore navy blue crepe.

It was a college romance for Millie and Bob. The bride-elect is a senior at Whitman College, her father's alma mater, in Walla Walla, Wash., and the college from which Mr. Valentine was graduated last June. He's now living in Pasadena, and is with the Carnation Milk Co.

Miss Douglas attended the Sidwell Friends School in Washington and Coolidge Junior High School.

Here for the party is Miss Florence Douglas of Bronxville, N. Y., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Douglas, and cousin of the pretty bride-to-be.

Mrs. Douglas had asked to assist her Mrs. Samuel Clark, Mrs. Thomas Corcoran, Mrs. Walter Wyatt, Mrs. Walter Louchheim, Mrs. Bruce Smith, and Mrs. Robert Sherrod.

MISS MILDRED DOUGLAS
... she's engaged

DOWN THE MIDDLE AISLE:

Miss Margery Clifford and Lieut. William H. Lanagan, jr., USMC, who are to be married today, were honored yesterday at a cocktail party given by Mr. and Mrs. George Shea. Mrs. Shea had originally planned a buffet supper for out-of-town wedding guests, but when the list passed the 100 mark, she decided a cocktail party would perhaps be better.

Friends of the bride and bridegroom from St. Louis, Philadelphia and New York were in the gathering. A welcoming fire was laid in the drawing room and a Christmas wreath was on every window. Long after cocktails, many of the guests found it was a supper party after all.

DEBUTANTE DOINGS:

Miss Claire Snow is giving a cocktail party on Christmas Eve for her debutante cousin, Miss Nancy Mann, daughter of Mrs. William T. Mann. A freshman at Smith College, Nancy will make her bow at a tea dance at the Sulgrave Club on Saturday, December 30.

MISS NANCY KEAR, debutante, was honored yesterday at a party given by a former classmate at National Cathedral, Miss Mary Alice Fravel. The party was from 5 to 7 at the Chevy Chase home of Miss Fravel's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Fravel.

Miss Kear, who is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Frank Gregg Kear of Chevy Chase, wore a strapless cocktail frock of red lace over electric blue satin and a corsage of white orchids. The hostess was in black taffeta, off-shoulder and ankle length, pinned at the waist with green orchids.

In the gathering, which was strictly for young people, were a number of debutantes including Miss Joan Conger, Miss Elizabeth Wetherill, Miss Mary Ann Robb, Miss Georgie McMahon, Miss Jane McAtee, Miss Sue Ann Rouse, Miss Cynthia Woll, Miss Rose Caudle, Miss Louise Cahill, Miss Caro Butler, and Miss Margaret Woodhouse.

Among their escorts were Basil Bateman, Rex Peters, Davis Elkins, Max Truitt, jr., Camden McAtee, Benjamin Dorsey, Josh Dorsey, Harry Karr, Lieut. William Hoover, George Nathan Hale, jr., Capt. Robert Rivers, William Reisinger, Jack van Deventer, Walter Leach, brother of the honor guest, and Charles Derry, cousin of the hostess.

ALONG EMBASSY ROW

One of the brightest events of a gay season was the cocktail party given yesterday by the retiring Minister of the Netherlands and Mme. Reuchlin. The several hundred friends who dropped by at the Admiral Club between 6 and 8 made up a brilliant gathering of top diplomats, officials and residential society.

Regretful farewells were said to the popular Minister and his wife, who are leaving Washington December 30 for New York to board ship and sail for Holland. At The Hague, Mr. Reuchlin will take over new duties as director general of political affairs in the Foreign Ministry.

The Dean of the Corps, Ambassador Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne, and Mme. Morgenstierne were among the guests, as well as the Belgian Ambassador, Baron Silvercruys; the Swedish Ambassador and Mme. Boheman, the Netherlands Ambassador and Mme. van Roijen, and the New Zealand Ambassador and Lady Berendsen.

SAD FAREWELLS turned into happy congratulations at the party given yesterday by Dr. N. A. C. Slotemaker de Bruine, press and cultural counselor of the Netherlands Embassy, and Mme. Slotemaker de Bruine.

The honor guest, Ph. W. van Heusde, Netherlands Attache, was scheduled to leave Washington tomorrow, but at the last minute made a change in plans and announced his engagement to Baroness Aletta C. van Harinxma thoe Slooten, who is also attached to the Netherlands Embassy. The couple will be married sometime early in January and sail together for the Netherlands on January 13.

The Canadian Ambassador and Mrs. Wrong were "at home" yesterday to members of the embassy staff and their wives between 6 and 7:30 o'clock. Eggnog and cocktails were served, as the holiday season was ushered in at this annual Christmas gathering.

MAJ. R. F. WALKER, secretary of the Canadian Joint Staff, and Mrs. Walker entertained yesterday at cocktails in the Canadian Joint Staff Building. The handsome rooms where they received were decorated with holly wreaths, a Christmas tree and sprigs of mistletoe.

Air Vice Marshal H. L. Campbell, chairman of the Canadian Joint Staff, and Mrs. Campbell were among the guests. Many others included Brigadier H. E. Taber, Canadian Military Attache, and Mrs. Taber; Commodore H. N. Lay, Canadian Naval Attache, and Mrs. Lay; Maj. Gen. and Mrs. R. L. Walsh, Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Court Van Schuyler, Col. and Mrs. A. E. Wrinch, Comdr. and Mrs. P. E. Haddon, Col. and Mrs. W. J. Cain, and Col. and Mrs. W. T. Bennett.

Paraffin Oil Makes a Good Furniture Polish, but It Shouldn't Be Used Too Often

DEAR ANNE:

I have been advised to use paraffin oil on my nest of teakwood tables. However, I am not sure how often to apply it and not quite certain as to the process. I should appreciate your advice on the matter. Also, can you tell me whether paraffin oil is a good polish for other kinds of wood. If so, how should it be used? A. C. Baker, Fort Davis st.

Paraffin oil should not be applied too often. A thin layer is all that is needed and you do not want to build up a thick coating. Once or twice a year is sufficient, depending on the amount of wear the surface gets. Work a small amount of the oil into a piece of cheesecloth, then go over table so as to leave a thin coating. Let set, then buff with soft cloth. Subsequent buffings from time to time will improve the glow on the surface. Yes, this is a good polish for any kind of wood.

DEAR ANNE:

Some of the silk scarves are too beautiful in color and pattern to twine around one's neck, and I have two which would make most attractive wall plaques. Could you please advise how to go about mounting a scarf for such purposes. A silk scarf is too light to hang as ordinary textiles. B. M. S., Washington.

You might line the scarves with heavier material in a neutral shade. They would then be substantial enough to serve as wall hangings. Or you might frame each scarf with a simple frame and glass, tacking the material unobtrusively to the board in the back of the frame. Use a lining beneath it if necessary.

DEAR ANNE:

I enclose a recipe for Pecan Pie, which another reader recently requested. I like this one better than the kind made with corn sirup. It is quicker and easier to mix. I have found that both recipes produce a pie of more even texture if the mixture is not beaten. By stirring the egg and sugar 'round and 'round, without beating, air bubbles are avoided. The pie cuts more evenly if the pecans are broken up. Whole ones cause breakage. Mrs. W. M. Robb, Fredericksburg, Va.

PECAN PIE

1/3 stick butter, melted
2 cups light brown sugar
½ teaspoon salt

Mix eggs, sugar and salt with spoon. Stir 'round and 'round and do not beat. Add melted butter and pecans. Pour into pastry-lined pan (9-inch). Bake at 450 degrees for 5 minutes. Reduce heat to 360 degrees and bake about 15 minutes longer.

Pie is done when knife dipped in center comes out clean. If edge of crust browns before center is done, cover with another pan.

DEAR ANNE:

Recently in your column a lady from Charlottesville asked if there was a gadget for making monograms on a sewing machine. For 50 cents, you can get a little gadget that slips on the presser foot of any sewing machine and allows you to sew solid or outlined monograms and you also get the alphabet in a number of different sizes. They aren't sold around here but have to be ordered. I know they exist because I have several. It is called Embroidery Guide.

Mrs. John Burdoft, RFD 2, Silver Spring, Md.

Can anyone give us a clue as to where to order these?

Honeywell Foundation School Will Present 'Cinderella' Dec. 21

"Cinderella," an English pantomime, is to be presented tomorrow by the students of the Honeywell Foundation School of Bethesda, for the benefit of Suburban Hospital. The play will be at 2 o'clock, at Hiser Theater.

The modern British pantomime is a unique form of entertainment, which baffles most "foreigners" and defies the attempts of even the British themselves to explain. With a mixture of musical comedy, revue, fairy tale and circus, the pantomime has something for everyone.

In keeping with custom, derived from Shakespearean days, the Prince Charming is a girl, and the ugly sisters are men. The cast of the Honeywell "Cinderella" will feature Laura Williams as Cinderella and Eleanor Halley as Prince Charming. George Rinehart and Delos W. Rentzel, jr., will be the ugly sisters, and the Baron and Baroness Hangover will be Francis Lo Blanco and Mary Van Veen. Other characters in the cast will be Karen Wentworth as Buttons, Shirley Wootton as the Fairy Godmother, and Peter Greenburg as Prince Montmorency.

GFWC Upholds Genocide OK Despite D. C. Federation Ban

THE GENERAL Federation of Women's Clubs will continue its stand favoring the U. N. genocide treaty, Mrs. Thalia Woods, executive director of the GFWC, announced yesterday. The statement was made after the D. C. Federation reaffirmed opposition to the treaty in a 30 to 5 vote at its December meeting Monday.

The genocide treaty, which condemns the mass murder of national, religious or racial groups, has not been ratified by the United States. A necessary 20 nations ratified it October 16, causing it to come into effect 90 days later. The General Federation maintains its stand, taken at the board of directors meeting in 1949, "indorsing the principle of genocide and urging its prompt ratification with adequate constitutional safeguards."

Mrs. Leslie B. Wright, legislative chairman for the General Federation, pointed out yesterday that when the national board voted its approval of the pact, the o. k. was unanimous — including the D. C. delegation. Opposition to the treaty developed within the D. C. group later, she said.

THE "SAFEGUARDS," or "reservations" sought by the GFWC have been added to the treaty by the Senate subcommittee which is recommending ratification. The reservations are as follows:

1. That traditional relations between the Federal Government and the States be protected.
2. That genocide be defined as the mass killing of a large and substantial portion of an entire race, or group.
3. That participation both "before and after the fact" must be established.
4. "Mental harm„' is defined as physical harm that permanently impairs the mental capacities of a group.

My Only Love

If all the treasures of the world . . . Belonged to me, my sweet . . . My only use for them would be . . . To lay them at your feet . . . To offer them along with all . . . The love I have for you . . . That all your hopes might be fulfilled . . . And all your dreams come true . . . And that would still be not enough . . . To tell your loving heart . . . How lonely and how sad I am . . . When we must be apart . . . I want you more than anything . . . the world can ever give . . . Because you are the only one . . . For whom I truly live . . . You are the sun that lights the dawn . . . The silver stars above . . . And all around the clock you are . . . The only one I love.

On the Town

By Georganne Williamson

VISITORS to the Statler Embassy Room this week will receive an early musical Christmas present—Evalyn Tyner and her trio are back. They left this fall to fill engagements at the William Penn in Pittsburgh and the Cleveland and Detroit Statlers.

With Washington's "first lady of the keyboard" will be drummer Johnny Smith and popular bass singer Ted Alexander. The trio will remain here throughout the holidays.

Judging from the press clippings, they were as much of a success on the road as they are here. Said one critic: "Miss Tyner is completely captivating, has a style entirely her own and also a strange and fascinating chic." As for her earth-shaking piano playing, the reviewers remarked on the "fiery keyboard style that provides spectacular musical fireworks," and the "rare power and variation to color her technical skill."

Washingtonians discovered all this about their native pianist long ago. Incidentally, a new Decca recording, "Malaguena," will particularly please Tyner fans.

Just last night, Steve Kisley's band took over from Bill Snyder. Kisley was at the Embassy Room last summer. The violin is his instrument and he has been playing it since he was 8. His music is on the soft and sweet side and is always danceable. Steve's violin often carries the melody, when Lee Drummond isn't singing it.

IF YOU'RE going out to lunch or dinner, you can do some of your Christmas shopping at the same time. Water Gate Inn is offering for sale a fruit cake made according to a 200-year-old recipe. They say it has all the tang and richness of the fruit cake your great-great-grandma used to make.

A variety of miniature items is being shown in the gift displays at both Normandy Farm and Water Gate Inn. Tiny dishes, genuine antique vases not more than 2 inches high and Pennsylvania Dutch figurines carved from wood are among these interesting Christmas gifts.

Most exciting of these miniatures, however, judging from spectator reactions, are the prehistoric animals in bronze. With a green patina, they look as though they have just stepped out of a "lost weekend."

A Permanent Needs a Little Help

By Ann Lawrence
(Seventh Day of Grace's Beauty Program.

AS WE TOLD you, to Grace's mind, a "permanent" meant permanent. Between waves, she never took care of her hair or scalp—which oddly enough are both very healthy except for dried-out ends. Her hair styling, of course, was nonexistent.

To broaden her forehead and foreshorten her long narrow face, the hairdresser gave Grace a three-quarter part. Then he shaped it simply but with clever scissoring so that her hair line would show at the sides, yet the sharpness of it would be broken with soft curls. The same curls, brushed forward after the hair has been combed back, will soften the jawline as well.

THE TOP of her hair was cut short and curled to take away from a "flat" look and these curls when combed out, fall forward in a pretty forehead wave. This arrangement helps hide some forehead wrinkles, too, but if you try it yourself be sure you don't allow the wave to fall too far down. This would be overdoing it and then people would be aware of the very wrinkles you would be attempting to conceal.

The hairdresser showed us a good trick for setting hair at the top of the head. Put little wads of cotton behind each pin curl. This prevents them from being pushed back and flattened out while drying, gives lovely lift to the wave.

GRACE HAS promised, too, that every night she will brush her hair to bring out the gloss and then set it as the stylist did with pin curls, turning them forward to the face.

'Package Deal' Settlement Sought in Rail Dispute

By the United Press

The Government tried yesterday to work out a "package deal" for settlement of the thorny railway wage dispute that led to last week's wildcat work stoppages and the parcel post embargo.

For the third day in succession, Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman met with the carriers and heads of the big four operating brotherhoods. The White House meetings continued into the night.

Three of the brotherhoods—the trainmen, firemen and conductors—are asking for a 40-hour week with 48-hours pay. The fourth, the Brotherhood of Railway Engineers, is demanding a flat 20 percent wage increase. In addition, the four unions are seeking a wide variety of rules changes.

In the face of these varying demands, Steelman is trying to get the brotherhoods to agree on a package deal that will be acceptable to the carriers. Sources here predicted he would be successful and that settlement would be announced within a few days.

Steelman kept the negotiators in session for 13 hours yesterday, the meeting breaking up at 3 a. m. He said afterward that "further progress was made."

In Chicago, after a series of conferences between attorney: for the Government and for the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the temporary restraining order demanding that the BRT return "sick" members to their jobs on the Nation's railroads was extended through January 19.

Originally the order would have expired Saturday.

John P. Lulinski, assistant district attorney, appeared first before Judge Michael L. Igoe before noon, and asked that the union turn over all its documents showing its efforts to comply with the temporary restraining order.

When the order failed to bring about an immediate return to work in last week's stoppage, the Government sought to have the BRT cited for contempt.

At 2 p.m., Lulinski again appeared before Igoe and said that he had conferred with BRT Attorney Walter N. Murray. Murray, he said, told him it was impossible to produce by tomorrow all of the letters and telegrams which the union issued in an effort to get its men to return to work. Lulinski said that he would confer with Murray again on dates for various hearings.

Nearly two hours later, Lulinski again appeared before Igoe. The extension of the restraining order was agreed upon. Arguments on the Government's efforts to get a temporary injunction rather than a restraining order were continued from December 21 to January 11, and arguments on the BRT's objections to producing the records were continued until January 5.

In District Court here yesterday, Judge Alexannder Holtzoff extended a temporary restraining order already imposed on the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

The extension, reached by stipulation between the Government and the trainmen, will run until the contempt action in Chicago is settled.

One On the Aisle

Alice in the Round Is Much Too Lean

By Richard L. Coe

THOUGH IT MAKES me feel like Old Scrooge to say so, the Arena Stage "Alice in Wonderland" leaves me totally without enthusiasm.

The best that can be said for this well-intentioned effort on the part of the local players is that it does give you some of the Lewis Carroll dialogue in costume.

And while that dialogue is brilliant logic in the light of page one's insane news, it is so in spite of rather than because of the production.

For the said fact is that "Alice" is not adapted to the intimate in-the-round style; it would take some brilliant make-believe to put across the fantasy the way Producers Edward Mangum and Zelda Fichandler have arranged it, and effort, alas, never has compensated for brilliance.

Within the limits of its intimate staging, it seems that Arena is trying to do two logical things with "Alice." For the youngsters, to whom this story is supposed to have its strongest appeal, it plays for the quaint and the childlike; one observes that the children in the audience are best satisfied when there is action, and action in this style is necessarily limited. For the adults, who are the true idolators of "Alice," it strives to make the most of the hilarious logic begun that long ago Fourth of July by an Oxford mathematics instructor during and outing on the Thames.

This business of the Rev. Charles Lutwidge Dodgson's appeal to oldsters is an old marvel in the literary world. That he told Alice's adventures to the three little Liddells has always given people the idea that this is perfect childhood nonsense, but watching the play with a solemn batch of youngsters, I couldn't help wondering whether Tweedledum and Tweedledee, the White Knight, Humpty-Dumpty, the Duchess and the Queens White and Red meant anything more than polite boredom to followers of Hopalong, Kukla, Fran and Ollie and the Lone Ranger. Isn't childhood a different thing nowadays?

And, if this is not necessarily true, haven't movies, radio, television and stage spectacles led even youthful minds to expect more than a few costumes and a bare stage?

The recent history of "Alice" on the stage suggests that those two conclusions have basis in fact. About 20 years ago, Eva Le Gallienne and Florida Friebus conceived a version of charming conceits which did well at New York's old 14th st. Civic Repertory. Miss LeGallienne revived this version with some amendments five seasons ago as the last of the American Repertory Theater plays, Bambi Lynn playing the title role, and a wonderful production it was. With the protection of the proscenium and the brilliant Bufano masks, this was a stunning production, entrancing fantasy, but so expensive to produce and run that it did but 97 performances in New York and floundered quickly on the expensive road.

Supreme Comic Writing

So it should not be surprising that on a comparatively invisible budget our Arena players can give but a skeleton idea of the fabulous things that happened to Alice. Walt Disney has now been working on his picture version three years, and I strongly suspect that only under his usually inspired technique will "Alice" really come to life for this generation of small fry.

The production will serve to remind their elders of some of the world's supreme comic writing; the dialogue of the two Queens and Alice, the sad business about the Jaberwocky, the indelicate lot of the Walrus and the Carpenter and the worried White Rabbit remain some of the mind's merriest creations.

The performances, while letter-perfect, serve to remind a faithful follower that the players have not yet learned they are acting in a very small room and that a broad, forceful style does not substitute for deft ease.

I'm sorry not to be shouting hosannas about this "Alice," but on neither the children's level nor the adult one can I find much cause for rejoicing. Still, if you've never read either "Wonderland" or "Looking Glass," this may tease you into a long overdue introduction.

THE HONEYWELL Foundation will be giving a single performance of "Cinderella," done in the British pantomime style, Thursday afternoon at 2 in the Hiser-Bethesda Theater... Laura Williams and Eleanor Halley will have the leading roles, with with Frances Lo Bianco, Mary Van Veen, George Rinehart, Delos W. Rentzel, jr., Karen Wentworth, Shirley Wootton and Peter Greenburg in chief supporting parts... Proceeds will be for the benefit of the Suburban Hospital.

ANOTHER children's production on the holiday schedule is "The King of the Golden River," to be given Thursday, December 28, at 10:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. in the Washington Hotel under sponsorship of the Children's Museum of Washington... The players will be the Children's Theater of New York under Clare Tree Major... Mrs. Major's group will do three more plays here later in the winter at the Wardman Park... Seats for both the Christmas play and the whole series are now on sale at the Book Mart, 820 F st., DIstrict 8143, or by phone through Miss Matilda Young, NOrth 7332, extention 101.

CHILDREN—"with talent"—from 4 to 16 are wanted for a new TV show to be produced on WTOP-TV starting January 13... The program will be called "Candy Corner," with Gene Klavan, as emcee, proprietor of the candy store where youngsters let loose... Applicants should write "Candy Corner, WTOP-TV, Washington 4, D. C., giving name, address, phone number, age and what they do; they will be sent information about when and where to appear for an audition... "Don't bother to sendclippings telling how good you are," adds Producer Bert Claster, who runs a similar show in Baltimore.

ARRIVING TOMORROW: Jeremy Spenser and Robin Dowell have two of the leads in "Prelude to Fame," a British film with a musical theme opening tomorrow at the Trans-Lux

Dr. E. C. Crittenden Retiring From Standards Bureau Post

Dr. Eugene Casson Crittenden, retiring as associate director of the National Bureau of Standards here since 1946, was honored at a testimonial dinner at the Wardman Park Hotel last night.

Crittenden

His retirement on December 31 marks the culmination of 41 years of scientific and administrative service with the bureau.

Dr. Crittenden, 70, of 1715 Lanier pl. nw., has long been a world authority on measurements of light. He also is renowned for his contributions to the establishment of absolute electrical units based on the fundamental units of length, mass and time.

His contributions were reviewed at the dinner by Dr. Edward U. Condon, director of the bureau, and by other senior staff members.

Presentations include a gold watch, from his associates, and a certificate of honorary life membership in the U. S. National Committee of the International Commission on Illumination, in which Dr. Crittenden has been active since 1924.

Dr. Crittenden came to the bureau in 1909 as an assistant physicist in the photometric laboratory. In 1921, he became chief of the Electrical Division, and served as such for 25 years. In 1933, he was made Assistant Director responsible for the over-all research activities of the bureau.

Dr. Crittenden was graduated from Cornell University in 1905 with a B. A. degree. He continued there as an instructor until he joined the Bureau four years later.

Cabbie Convicted Of Auto Assault On Policeman

He is Steve Dargo, 1345 Irving st. nw. A jury deliberated 50 minutes after a two-day trial before Judge Armond W. Scott. Dargo's case was continued to January 12 for sentencing and he was freed under $1000 bond.

Dargo was arrested for speeding on September 19 by Pvt. Jack D. Cornett in the 1400 block of 14th st. nw. While Cornett was standing by his motorcycle talking to Dargo, the cabdriver sped away, knocking Cornett to the ground. Dargo forfeited $25 collateral on the speeding charge. In court he charged that he had been assaulted by police.

The case was prosecuted by Assistant United States Attorney Alfred Hantman.

Survey Worker Finds Camp Site 7000 Years Old

The Smithsonian Institution announced yesterday that a United States Geological Survey worker discovered a bivouac in far northern Alaska showing that humans camped there on migrations inland from 7000 to 12,000 years ago.

The Smithsonian announcement says the discovery, by Robert J. Hackman of 3579 Warder st. nw., is "considered on of the most significant yet made in North American archeology."

Hackman was member of a six-man Geological Survey party that went into the region north of the Arctic Circle about 165 miles southeast of Point Barrow with snow tractors last summer.

Artifacts—samples of human handicrafts—were found at the archeological site. They included a fragment of a spearhead similar to a type that is among the earliest known remains on the American continent.

The artifacts have been turned over to the Smithsonian's Bureau of American Ethnology for study.

Minnesota Claims New Mexico 'Thing'

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 19 (AP).—New Mexico's "Thing," a mysterious 18-inch metal sphere which dropped from the sky, today was recognized by University of Minnesota scientists as equipment they sent aloft to study cosmic rays.

Identification was made from an Associated Press wirephoto picture published in the Minneapolis Star.

Minnesota scientists, working with the Navy's Office of Naval Research, have been sending similar sets of apparatus to high altitudes for cosmic ray studies. The instruments are lifted by large plastic balloons.

John Linsley, research assistant at the university, said he and other members of the department recognized all the details as "our apparatus." He said it probably was one sent up from within New Mexico by a group that made an expedition there about a year ago.

Linsley said University of New Mexico scientists likely would be asked to express the sphere to Minnesota.

Dr. Lincoln Lapaz, head of the Institute of Meteoritics at the University of New Mexico, disclosed at Albuquerque yesterday that the sphere has been found, along with an alarm clock, packages of film, and other objects—and had not been explained. They came to his attention on November 23.

"These flights have been launched over a period of some three or five years," a spokesman for the Office of Naval Research said in Washington. "Many of the balloons have been found all over the country. It is a part of Project Skyhook."

Control of Radio And TV in Case Of Air Raid Asked

Defense officials asked Congress last night for authority for President Truman to control radio and television stations if necessary to prevent an enemy from using their signals to guide planes or missiles to targets in the United States.

Air Force officials said that in case of imminent air attack radio stations either might be turned off or "manipulated" to destroy their usefulness as a navigational aid to enemy planes or missiles.

Assistant Defense Secretary Marx Leva sent a draft of the proposed sweeping legislation to the chairman of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees.

Leva asked them to introduce the legislation and permit Air Force officials to explain "its urgent necessity" behind closed doors.

West Readies Bid to Russia For Parleys

BRUSSELS, Dec. 19 (AP).—The Big Three Western Foreign Ministers gave final approval tonight to replies conditionally accepting a Soviet bid for a new Big Four meeting, a highly placed source said.

United States Secretary of State Acheson, British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin and French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman held a four-hour meeting after the windup of a two-day session of the North Atlantic Council.

Russia proposed November 3 that the Big Four powers get together again to discuss unification of divided Germany. Preliminary drafts of the Western replies, accepting in principle, were drawn up in Paris last week. These reflected official sentiment in Washington, London and Paris that such a meeting would prove profitable only if the Russians agreed to talk about the whole range of East-West problems, not just Germany.

A hitch in the Soviet proposal for unification of Germany, in the Western view, is that the Russians want East Germany, with 18-million population, to have an equal voice with West Germany, whose population is almost three times as large.

Truman Gives Tip To Politicians on Staying Too Long

President Truman was reported to have told Senate Democrats last night that if you stick around long enough in politics the people may kick you out.

Mr. Truman, a surprise visitor, spoke at a closed dinner meeting given by Senate Democrats for their party colleagues who were defeated in the November election. Senator Lucas of Illinois, the Democratic leader, was presented with a set of golf clubs. Senator Myers of Pennsylvania, the assistant leader, was given a traveling bag.

Those who attended said Mr. Truman urged his former Senate colleagues to unite in support of the Administration in the critical times that lie ahead.

Reminiscing about his experiences in the Senate, the President was reported to have told the Democrats that they can't always expect to win in elections.

In this vein, Mr. Truman was said to have told the Democrats that most politicians stay in the running until the people decide to kick them out. He was said to have added that some time that might even happen to him.

Disorderliness Arrest Follows Police Safari

A routine check of a complaint of disorderliness at 3100 Wisconsin ave. last night mushroomed into a major police action attended by a dozen policemen, a handful of plainclothesmen, a lieutenant and a night inspector.

Pvts. E. J. Smith and David Chefer of the Eighth Precinct Station touched it off when they knocked on the door of apartment 303. A voice within told them to leave and threatened to shoot.

Relayed over the police radio, this information brought six more police cars to the scene. A janitor brought a key to 303. Inside police found John E. Quisenberry, about 60, and his wife, Katie, 56, but no firearms. Quisenberry was charged with being drunk and disorderly.

D. C. Must Notify Land Seller of Law Violations

The District must notify a seller that a violation of law exists on his property before that seller can be held liable to unknowing purchasers, the Municipal Court of Appeals ruled yesterday.

The decision arose in the case of Russell D. Lowe who bought a household in 1946 and discovered three years later that the sewage system was connected to a septic tank, not with the public sewer.

Lowe was forced to spend nearly $1000, after being told the presence of the septic tank was a violation of law and ordered by the District authorities to connect with the public sewer. The couple claimed the bill should have been paid by the seller of the house, William B. Kraft.

Because the District failed to notify anyone of the violation until 1946, Kraft was not liable, the appellate court ruled, reversing a decision by Municipal Court Judge Thomas Scalley.

Embassy Worker Missing Since November 26

Embassy officials said he is Charles Randolph Topp, 1413 Q st. nw., who had worked as a house man there for 20 years.

Police said Topp was last seen leaving Freedmen's Hospital last month. Police said he was taken there after suffering an epileptic seizure at 14th and T sts. nw., but refused treatment and walked away.

Shugart Asks Teacher Pay Boost Delay

G. Gardner Shugart, Prince Georges County school superintendent, last night asked an emergency gathering of about 500 county teachers to refrain from seeking specific salary increases now.

If the demands are submitted and they are beyond the county's capacity to pay, "you might get nothing," he told the meeting, called by the County Teachers Association at Bladensburg High School.

Shugart announced a plan to form a county-wide committee to study the present wage situation, similar to the one made in 1946. The committee would consist of four representatives each from the teachers' association, the P.-T.A., and the school administrative staff, with the county council, the president of the teachers association and the school superintendent as ex officio members.

The school superintendent said such a committee would be in a better position to survey the need for salary boosts than would a mass meeting like last night's. The teachers' association would be given the opportunity to amend any findings or proposals brought in by the committee.

Some teacher spokesmen at the meeting urged a $400 boost in the $2400 base, with a sliding annual increase. Others suggested an immediate $200 hike retroactive to last September 1, and an incremental increase of $200 effective next September 1.

Dr. J. C. Eckhardt Named to Head Health Bureau

The District Commissioners yesterday appointed Dr. John C. Eckhardt director of the Health Department's bureau of preventable diseases to succeed Dr. Carl C. Dauer.

Eckhardt has been acting director since Dauer resigned two months ago to take a position with the United States Public Health Service.

A graduate of George Washington University Medical School, Eckhardt served in the Army Medical Corps during World War I, then practiced until he joined the bureau in 1936 for work on contagious diseases.

He is Representative Harold D. Donohue (D., Mass.) who found a purse containing $193 in cash on Union Station Plaza and later managed to return it to its owner, Miss Geneva Weigel, of Louisville, Ky.

Miss Weigel was in town to see her fiance, Corp. David R. Mutchler, stationed at Arlington Hall. Miss Weigel was and still is going to use the money to help pay the couple's honemooning expenses. They're getting married in Louisville a week from today.

Profit Shares Planned By Two Auto Agencies

Floyd D. Akers, president of Capitol Cadillac-Oldsmobile Co., 1222 22d st. nw., announced yesterday that 25 percent of the company's profits under the profit-sharing plan will be distributed among its employes Saturday.

Each employe will receive $27.40 for each year of employment. In addition each employe will receive 10.1 percent of his annual salary as further recognition of his services. The employes of the Akers Oldsmobile-Cadillac Co. of Alexandria will also share in the profits, Akers said. Two hundred and sixty employes in Washington and Alexandria are affected.

12 Ask Court To Dismiss Contempt

Twelve witnesses charged with contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions posed by a congressional committee yesterday asked a Federal court to dismiss their indictments as unconsitutional.

The petitioners included Secretary-Treasurer Julius Emspak of the left-wing United Electrical Workers union; James J. Matles, United Electrical workers organization director; Philip Bart, general manager of the newspaper, Daily Worker; and Mrs. Louise Berman, San Francisco fruit heiress now residing in New York.

They had refused to answer under oath before the House Un-American Activities Commitee.

The 12 argued that the indictments are invalid because the Constitution guarantees the right to refuse to answer if the replies would be self-incriminating.

They cited last week's U. S. Supreme Court ruling that a person may withhold self-incriminating replies before a grand jury.

Others filing motions included Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, chief steward of UEW Local 601, Pittsburgh; Thomas Quinn and Frank Panzino, Pittsburgh UEW members; Talmadge Raley, UEW business representative, Esther Tice, UEW member, and Frank Hashmall, all of Cincinnati; Clarence Hiskey, former University of Chicago atom scientist; and Pasquale L. J. Branca, Washington drug salesman.

D. C. Enlistments Unaffected by Mobilization Plan

Washington recruiting offices—unlike those in most of the Nation—have not experienced any spurt in voluntary enlistments as a result of President Truman's mobilization announcements.

But Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force recruiters here expect the rate to increase greatly after January 1.

The Marines said they have had the same rate this month as last. The Navy reported "no significant increase."

School Head Gray Runs Into Trouble As Paper Carrier

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Dec. 18 (AP).—The man brought the bundle of newspapers into the soda shop yesterday, and pitched it onto the counter, accidentally knocking other papers to the floor.

"What's the matter with you?" stormed a clerk.

Later the scarlet-faced clerk learned that the man was Gordon Gray, former Secretary of the Army and new president of the University of North Carolina here. The regular carrier was sick. Gray's son had promised to pinch-hit, but became ill himself. So the university president became carrier for the day.

Creation of Motions Court For Divorce Cases Urged

A special committee of the District Bar Association yesterday recommended abolition of the domestic relations commissioner's office here and proposed a separate motions court to handle annulment and uncontested divorce cases.

The report of the committee, of which Arthur J. Hilland was chairman, wrote another chapter in a drawnout controversy over various proposals for speedier and more efficient disposition of domestic relations matters in the District.

It followed overwhelming rejection last May by the bar association of another special committee report, favoring the so-called Detroit System with a marital affairs counsel employed by the court to replace the commissioner.

Laws Backs Counsel Plan

Supported by a committee of three District Court judges headed by Judge Edward A. Tamm, the Detroit plan would have expanded the office's staff with broader powers—to collect alimony and testimony from litigants and to recommend care and custody of children involved in divorce cases.

Chief Judge Bolitha J. Laws, who appointed the judicial committee to study the problem, supported the marital affairs counsel plan.

Motions Court Setup Urged

1. Establish a motions court to meet from day to day to dispose of all motions in domestic realtions cases and to hear "uncontested divorce and annulment cases as speedily as possible, without any fixed waiting period." (Such motions are now heard one day a week).

2. Abolish the domestic relations commissioner and have the judge presiding in divorce cases determine the outcome upon evidence in open court with cross-examination.

3. Have the court advance to "speedy and final trial on its merits" any action involving the custody of a child, if the court feels the child's welfare would be endangered by delay.

Commenting on the latest report, Philip M. Hamilton, domestic relations commissioner since the office was established in 1940, said he has urged that the powers of his office be broadened. He recommended they include the power to subpena witnesses, to swear witnesses and to collect and disburse alimony and maintenance payments.

5-Man Board Of Engineers Named for D.C.

The District Commissioners yesterday appointed a five-man board of engineers to administer a new law requiring the licensing of all practicing engineers here.

Board members, recommended by District Director of Inspection Robert H. Davis, are:

Daniel C. Walser, civil engineer member, named for a five-year term; Leo H. Cleary, electrical engineer member, four years; M. X. Wilberding, mechanical engineer member, three years; Martin T. Bennett, chemical engineer member, two years, and Lee D. Purnell, unclassified engineer engineer member, one year.

Deputy Director of Inspection J. J. Ilgenfritz said the board will meet Thursday morning at the District Building to set up the machinery for passing on qualifications.

The new law requires the licensing of all persons now practicing engineering, as well as newcomers to the field. After a date that will probably be set Thursday, the District will approve no plans involving an engineer unless the person has been licensed, Ilgenfritz said.

Licensing of engineers is now required in all States, Ilgenfritz said.

French Evacuate Another Outpost

SAIGON, French Indo-China, Dec. 19 (U.P.).—French troops today abandoned to Communist-led Vietminh forces another outpost guarding a strategic defense bastion on the Chinese frontier.

French military headquarters announced that the evacuation of the outpost defending Dinhlap, 90 miles northeast of Hanoi, by "perhaps one or two companies," had been carried out without fighting.

Weinberg to Return As Wilson Assistant

Sidney J. Weinberg, New York investment banker and wartime vice chairman of the War Production Board, is expected to be appointed as special assistant to the new Defense Mobilizer, Charles E. Wilson, it was learned last night.

Weinberg, a director of many corporations and a long-time member of the Commerce Department Business Advisory Council, was assistant to WPB Chairman Donald M. Nelson from January, 1942 to August 1943. He was vice chairman of the agency from June to August 1944 when Wilson was it executive head.

4 GIs Accused Of Filing False Holdup Report

Four soldiers who touched off an area-wide search for two nonexistent holdup men late Monday were arrested by Fairfax County police yesterday on charges of filing a false report.

The men were booked at the Groveton substation after warrants were sworn out by Detective Sergt. Joseph Howard. They were identified as Pvts. Kenneth L. Nunn, 21; Billy C. Hill, 17; James C. Dervill, 17, and Joe A. Redwine, 17, all of Fort Belvoir. They are to face trial in Fairfax trial justice court today at 10 a. m.

The four reported they were robbed of $120 by two men at a bus stop south of Alexandria. They gave the license number of an auto in which they said the holdup pair sped away.

Investigation showed, police said, that the men lost about $40 to a civilian in a card game on a bus. The man fled with a companion in an automobile which the soldiers later described as the "holdup car," according to the detective.

3 Burned in Freak Accident

Subfreezing temperatures set off a chain of circumstances early yesterday which brought severe burns to the operator of a street roller in the 900 block of Girard st., ne., police reported.

John Pickett, 45, of 113 Massachusetts ave., nw., stepped down from his machine to thaw out frozen gasoline lines about 9 a. m. Police said he apparently spilled gasoline on his clothes in handling the connections which were clogged with ice.

When he approached a group of workers huddled around a near-by oil drum in which a fire was burning, Pickett's clothes suddenly burst into flame.

Two other members of the road repair crew, Walter Ponton, 47, of 6647 7th pl., nw., and Owen Simmons, 43 of 831 4th st., ne., extinguished the flames by beating them and rolling Pickett on the ground.

Taken to Casualty Hospital in an ambulance from Fire Department Rescue Squad No. 1, Ponton and Simmons were treated for sceond-degree burns of the hands and released. Pickett was admitted for treatment of second- and third-degree burns of the hands and arms, and of slight burns about the face. His condition was listed as not serious.

Letter from Girl Adds to Problems In Matthews' Job

By the United Press

Navy Secretary Francis P. Matthews had a tough job today—turning down the Christmas request of 9-year-old Carolyn Hall, Martinsville, Va.

Carolyn wrote to Santa Claus in care of her hometown newspaper. She said all she wants for Christmas is to have her daddy, Engineman Joseph Earl Hall, home.

The letter was forwarded to Matthews by the Martinsville bulletin.

Matthews wrote back that he would "gladly" grant Carolyn's request if he could do so without being unfair to other children.

"There are hundreds of little children who want their daddies with them for Christmas," he said. "Their membership in the armed forces, however, imposes upon those beloved fathers the stern duties which are paramount even to the parental obligations which animate their hearts."

Beltsville Pair Honored on 50th Anniversary

A Beltsville, Md., couple, Mr. and Mrs. Albert B. Neal, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary last night at the home of their only son, Oscar T. Neal, 4104 31st st., Mount Rainier, Md.

Both from families of eight children, Mr. Neal, 74, and Mrs. Neal, 73, met in 1900 "just like country folks do . . . at a dance." They married in Mayfield, Ky., near Paducah—where he was a tobacco farmer, she a seamstress in a woolen mill.

After moving to Beltsville in 1931, Mr. Neal was employed in the Department of Agriculture Research Center there.

Their two grandsons are carriers for The Washington Post—Bill, 16 and Tom, 14. Another granddaughter, Zelma, is 9.

Monty on the Radio

Now, With Woolley It's Strictly Insults

By John Crosby

THE PERSONALITY and general characteristics of Monty Woolley have now attained what is known in the trade as audience acceptance. That means the mass public will not only accept but even demand from Woolley certain eccentricities they wouldn't take from anyone else.

Crosby

If you have Charles Boyer on a radio program, all the female members of the cast start acting like 16-year-old fillies. The fact that Boyer is well advanced in years now, that girls don't really feel that way about Boyer, and that it's all a terrible tired joke doesn't alter circumstances. Boyer has to be treated in certain ways in deference to tradition; the babes will continue to swoon over him if he lives to be 96.

From Woolley you expect—in fact, demand—something different. Insults. Woolley's waspish temper originated in "The Man Who Came to Dinner" and has since been embalmed in countless movies, magazine articles and radio programs. Sooner or later it was bound to be fixed permanently on a radio program of his own and it has been, "The Magnificent Montague" (NBC, WRC, 9 p. m., Fridays.)

"THE MAGNIFICENT MONTAGUE" is composed almost exclusively of insults, padded here and there only with enough plot to move Woolley from scene to scene. In radio, where sweetness and light reign so uninterruptedly, a little barbed wit sounds refreshingly candid. Just the same, somewhere in the establishment of the Woolley personality in the magazines, the movies, the stage, there has been a diminution of values, a cheapening of standards and a general lowering of tone.

In "The Man Who Came To Dinner," a nurse had the temerity to tell the invalided Woolley that he mustn't eat candy. "My dear woman," rasped Mr. W., "my great Aunt Sarah ate candy every day of her life and she lived to be 102 and two days after she died she looked better than you do now." Then there was the movie wherein Woolley, dressed as Santa Claus, uttered a monstrous belch. A woman gave him an indignant glare. Said Woolley: "What did you expect, Madam? Chimes?"

Nothing in "The Great Montague" quite approaches the candlepower of these particularly bright inspirations. On his radio program, quantity is substituted for quality. Here is Woolley on the subject of his breakfast. "Gad, what a messy sight! Just because the eggs were laid by a Plymouth Rock, must they look like a Pilgrim just pulled his foot out of it . . . This toast is so badly burnt, I'm sure I can collect insurance on it . . . I don't mind strong coffee but I do not like it when it comes out of the cup swinging."

ALL THOSE REMARKS have beads of sweat on them as if the writer (Nat Hiken) were not temperamentally suited to the art of insult, as if he were a gentle soul who loves children, dogs and other people's grandmothers. If this is true, they had better dig up someone more suitable—the type of man who steals pennies out of a blind man's cup.

To get down to some more specific details, Woolley plays the part of an ex-Shakespearean actor who has fallen in the social scale to the point where he is playing Uncle Goodheart on an afternoon radio program. This gives him an opportunity to insult his maid, his director, writer and producer, radio in general and an occasional dog.

He does all this with such great exuberance and genuine feeling that even the most mechanical of his lines ring with a certain amount of conviction.

Crime and Punishment, Modern Style

If you're looking for something different and interesting to do, attend a session of Municipal Court some day—either the Traffic Division or the "Drunk Court" (which also handles misdemeanors other than intoxication).

Not only will you encounter distinctly different types of clientele in these two courts, but varying schools of thought regarding punishment.

The penalty in each case depends on the circumstances, and on the judge. But patterns quickly begin to become discernible.

In Traffic Court, most of those found guilty pay a fine. Drunken driving is becoming very unfashionable these days, to be sure, and on rare occasions draws a few days in the cooler. But most other traffic offenses are put on a fine-or-jail basis, and the culprit usually elects to pay the fine.

In Drunk Court, half the defendants are not only reconciled to going to jail, but, actually seem eager to go. Especially in the winter time. The result is that when a judge says "25 dollars or 30 days," it's a good bet that no money will change hands.

That "25 dollars or 30 days," incidentally, seems to be the standard rate of exchange. But sometimes it's doubled and becomes "50 dollars or 60 days," and some customers get a special rate of "100 dollars or 90 days." (If I could remember those high school definitions of arithmetic and geometric progressions, I could probably explain this better.)

Most of those who are given an alternative manage to raise the amount of the fine and remain in circulation, although there are times when this is not accomplished without the placing of a number of frantic SOS phone calls.

Those who have neither money nor friends who will lend it are carted off to the pokey to serve out their time, usually at the rate of 83 cents a day. The lucky fellows who are sentenced to "100 dollars or 90 days" get a special rate of $1.11 per day.

These were apparently the standard wage rates at the time our laws were written. Since then, of course, our lawgivers have decreed that 75 cents shall be the minimum worth attached to an hour of a man's time, but our penal system hasn't caught up with that change yet.

It may be that defendants in these cases need a union.

GIVE-AWAYS

"Gentle, housebroken cats." (Falls Church 2538 or Chestnut 3526.)

"One-year-old mother cat, excellent mouser, and three half-grown kittens." (Sterling 9200, extension 2446 during day, or Dupont 6969 after 7 p. m.)

"Brindle Great Dane, 18 months old, fine watchdog but affectionate playmate and used to children." (Sligo 4597.)

TRANSIT RADIO AGAIN

"Your item about Transit Radio was, I believe, misleading in three important respects," writes Claude N. Palmer, president of Transit Riders Association, Inc., of 2017 S st. nw.

The association is opposed to forced listening in public transportation vehicles. Palmer takes issue with me on these points:

1. "You implied knowledge from 'informed sources' that the FCC is not interested in complaints against Transit Radio. We are assured by an FCC spokesman that the Commission is interested.

(Note: My statement said that informed sources thought that the FCC had not been overly "impressed" with arguments against streetcar radios.)

2. "You imply that a return of $60,000 a year to Capital Transit would 'help keep fares down and service up.' With a yearly payload of 157,000,000 customers, Capital Transit would be getting only $0.00038 for each fare paid."

(Note: Compared to Capital Transit's gross, radio revenues are indeed small. But every penny of radio revenue is added directly to net profit, because Transit Radio entails no expense for the streetcar company. These radio revenues are therefore of far greater importance to stockholders than a similar number of dollars collected in fare boxes, which would no doubt be accompanied by a corresponding rise in operating expenses. What's more, the figure "$60,000 per year" did not appear in my item because nobody knows how much Transit Radio will earn in future years.)

3. "Your opinion that 'Transit Radio is here to stay' has made some of our members wonder if this organization has dropped its fight. This is an erroneous impression. Minneapolis has passed an ordinance banning radio from its buses and streetcars, and similar action is expected in other cities. Resolute opposition to forced listening will, if necessary, be carried to the United States Supreme Court. Our opposition is here to stay."

(Note: I did not mention Transit Riders Association. Had I written anything on this phase of the matter, I'd have said that the association is basing its objections on points that seem to me to be legally sound. As to action in Minneapolis and other cities: These are municipal decisions, and have nothing to do with the FCC.)

PRICE FREEZE

Federal Diary Man Jerry Kluttz suggested that I write an item about the Price Refrigeration Co. at 1124 9th st. nw. just so that I'd have an excuse for the caption above.

OVERHEARD

"I can't get very excited about the announcement that they've quit selling new cars, but I'd sure celebrate if they'd announce that they're going to quit collecting installments on the one I bought this summer."

Marshall Held Urging Caution

By Drew Pearson

A unique backstage difference of opinion has developed between two of the most important policy-makers in the Cabinet—Secretary of State Acheson and Secretary of Defense Marshall—over hostilities in the Orient.

Pearson

The difference is that Acheson, accused by Republicans of being an appeaser, is far more belligerent than Marshall, a military man.

Marshall's view—and it's shared by other military men—is that we must let no hysterical cries from Congress or irresponsible military actions in Asia embroil us in war. What Marshall and his military staff fear is that some sudden move by us may convince the Russians we are about to attack, thereby causing them to move first.

Therefore, Secretary Marshall, in meetings of the Cabinet and the National Security Council, has pleaded for calmness. He has also warned General MacArthur against any move which would bring on World War III, and he was opposed to MacArthur's troop movements near the Manchurian border after it had been agreed that we would keep a 40-mile neutrality zone this side of Manchuria.

War Can Be Averted

Secretary Marshall points out—and it's no secret to the rest of the world—that we are in no position to fight World War III and cannot be for at least a year. He also believes that if we live through the next 12 months without war, there is a chance of averting it altogether. That is the reason President Truman's recent speech emphasized that peace, not war, is our goal.

Though Marshall and Acheson are warm friends and worked together in the State Department, Acheson is perhaps the most militant nonappeaser in the Administration—perhaps the natural reaction to unfair attacks against him as a commie sympathizer.

Acheson has proposed a naval blockade of the China coast, urged the bombing of Chinese cities, and favors keeping a military bridgehead in Korea. These measures were opposed by Prime Minister Attlee during his recent visit, and are also opposed by top United States military men.

3 Rearmament Dangers

1. Politicians who clamor for all-out military aggressiveness. Governor Dewey's speech was regarded by the Pentagon as too aggressive, though it was secretly encouraged by the State Department.

2. Military men who clamor for a preventive war. General MacArthur is placed in this category.

3. State Department officials, including Acheson, who insist on aggressive action.

NOTE—Military chiefs point to another domestic danger in connection with rearmament—namely, drafting too many trainees before the Army has enough camps and training officers. Secretary Marshall wants to move just as swiftly as possible but only as fast as the military machine can absorb men and weapons. He hopes for a steady 365-days-a-year preparedness, not a lot of quick hullabaloo followed by lethargy.

Behind the RR Strike

Inside fact is that President Truman was warned weeks ago of a railroad strike unless John Steelman, his genial White House aide, brought union and management together.

The warnings came from two Senators and two troubled Cabinet members—Attorney General Howard McGrath, Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin, Elbert Thomas, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, and Senator Wayne Morse, onetime War Labor Board member.

All pointed out that the trainmen and conductors were restive because:

Twenty-two months of negotiations were fruitless. The operating railroad employes had been two years without a pay hike, while one million nonoperating workers for the same bosses had what amounted to a 20 percent raise. In the five months of Government management of the roads, Steelman had yet to bring the union heads and railroad president together in the same room.

When the President asked Morse what he would do, the former chairman of the War Labor Board replied: "I'd do exactly as I did in the 1941 dispute—bring both sides into a hotel room and keep them there until they get together. It took me 69 hours, but we settled it. You need a good mediator, one that both sides have faith in. A strike is not justified, but you're going to have one as sure as shooting unless Steelman produces something."

Morse argued that, when the Government took over management of the roads, it should decide the merits of the dispute and make a positive finding. Mr. Truman's reply was, "Talk to John (Steelman) about that."

Note 1—Union chiefs who have been living out of suitcases in Washington hotels for weeks are privately burned up at Steelman. One of them said bitterly: "Steelman has told Mr. Truman there was great progress and a settlement was in sight, when all we've had is an offer to raise pay five cents an hour, if we'll sign a three-year, no-strike contract. We haven't even seen a railroad president, nothing but lawyers and clerks. Steelman told the President a few days ago we had agreed not to strike. That was not true."

Note 2—There is a backstage move to ease Steelman out as mediator and bring in a really top-flight labor conciliator like Cy Ching or Mrs. Anna Rosenberg.
